National Association Calls to Arms Against Parcels Post

Urges All Retailers to Labor With Their Representatives in Congress. Secretary Illinois Association Writes to Roosevelt Direct. The Inconsistency of the Ohio Wholesale Grocery House Which Is Operating Retail Stores.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 29, 1907.

While delivering an address in Massachusetts before the leading Republicans of that State on August 8, 1907, the Postmaster-General used these words:—

I am also thinking that we should consider, and Congress should see fit to give the department the right to establish a parcels post throughout the country, the weight not to exceed five or ten pounds as a trial. I hope that will be the judgment of Congress. Certainly it could be experimented on with the rural delivery.

I would respectfully urge that every retailer, no matter what his location, take it upon himself to write a letter to the Postmaster-General, to see or write his Congressman at once, and all prospective candidates for Congress, and compel each to make a statement as to where he stands, in regard to this proposition.

Apropos of this matter, Secretary George E. Green, of the Retail Merchants' Association of Illinois, has addressed the following letter to President Roosevelt:—

Honorable Sir:—Noticing in the "Daily Evening News," Chicago, Friday, August 16, an editorial which gives a purported interview between your honor and Postmaster General Meyer, announcing the fact that a recommendation will be made to Congress in the next annual report by your honor, recommending a domestic parcels post. In reference to same, I beg to submit for your perusal an address delivered before the annual convention of the National Retail Merchants' Association, held in Dallas, Texas, January, 1907, and which expresses the views of the retailers concerning this question. Fully believing that the enactment of a parcels post law by our Congress will seriously cripple the future prospect and largely reduce the number of the smaller retailers, and serve particularly in enlarging the volume of business of a few in the large trade centers, thus in a measure the government will, by such an act, materially aid toward creating a monopoly, and for further reasons set forth in the address, will in the future as in the past, be vigorously opposed by the retailers of the United States.

Wishing to place before your honor as clearly as possible the convictions of the retail merchants throughout our land, and humbly begging your earnest consideration of the same, beg to remain,

Most truly yours,

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF ILLINOIS.

GEORGE E. GREEN, Secretary.

The initial announcement of the wholesale grocery concern which recently established a chain of retail stores in Ohio was as follows:—

As cities grow, expand in wealth and population, business conditions change, and the establishing of various branch stores is only abreast of the times, and exactly the same conditions as have occurred in all the large cities of the United States, giving the consumers high grade goods and good service at the lowest prices. It does not stand to reason that a dealer doing a small business can furnish to consumers groceries on the same advantageous terms as though he were operating a large number of stores, whereby his buying power is increased, which he resells at a minimum price.

To analyze this statement, we find a number of points in which the retailer is constrained to take issue with the said wholesale house. One of the prominent thoughts is the broad statement that a dealer doing a small business cannot furnish to consumers groceries on the same advantageous terms as though he were operating a large number of stores. Applying this particularly to the branch or chain stores in the grocery line let us consider for a moment what the difference in purchasing power could possibly be. I am informed upon creditable authority by a prominent grocer whose business runs into millions per annum, that the gross per cent. of profit derived by the wholesale grocery is but about 7 or 8 per cent. If they ever reach 9 per cent. they consider it exceptionally high.

Now, assuming that a wholesale concern operating a number of branch or chain stores would deliver to these branch concerns goods at first cost to them (which would be a false position, since they are under expense of conducting the said wholesale concern), the saving from combined purchase could not be more than 7 or 8 per cent., which is a small percentage in itself, and I would repeat in order to do that the wholesale concern must handle the goods and distribute them to their branch concerns without

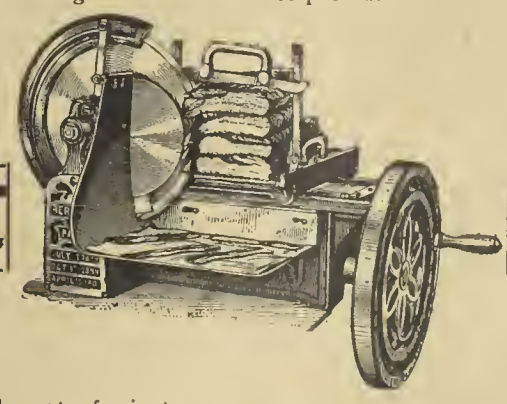
Getting Trade—and Holding It

It is comparatively easy to increase your trade; but it's harder to increase your profitable trade.

Any grocer can fill his store with customers by cutting prices low enough—but what's the use? This kind of trade doesn't pay; and trade obtained in this way cannot be held for a day against another advertisement of cut prices by the man up the street or around the corner.

The only way to get the right kind of trade and hold it is by means of quality. But with this trade you can afford to let your competitor have the cheap, bargain-hunting class that cuts into profits.



Take sliced meats, for instance.

There's a town in Michigan where there are six or seven stores handling sliced meats, and owing to a price-cutting war they are selling these goods at a cent or so above wholesale.

That is, they're all doing this but one. He has an American Slicing Machine. He's going right along, selling at a fair profit, and getting the best trade in town. Mrs. Smith, who bought from Jones yesterday but will trade with Brown to-day, because he's cut his prices two cents, doesn't trade with this man. But the nice trade—the kind that appreciates better-looking, better-cooking, better-tasting sliced meat and 20 per cent. more slices to the pound, keeps coming.

He's making a better profit on each sale, he's got the trade and he's happy. Ask us about the machine.

any provision for expense of distribution.

Then, again, it is a well-known fact that branch stores cannot be operated as economically and judiciously as by the dealer himself. A careful, economical supervision sedom is obtained through a manager for the branch concern, as the proprietor himself can or will do. Then, again, a point which should receive the severest condemnation at the hands of retailers, is the one of creating distrust and dissension between the patrons of the retailer and himself. The statement by this concern is along the same line of argument and pretension made by the retail mail order houses, placing the smaller retailer in the light of being both incompetent to purchase his goods at fair market values and being a robber, representing him as asking exorbitant prices for his wares.

This idea of creating distrust and dissension, particularly by and through a wholesale concern, depending upon the retailers for support, should never be tolerated, and can only be dealt with by and through organized effort. Upon the same theory, this wholesale house would have no right to existence, as the manufacturers through whom this wholesale house receives its supplies could go to the retailer and furnish the retailer with their manufactured product, eliminating the wholesale grocer's cost of doing business. It is just as reasonable, just as logical.

Rules Governing Claims By Retail Grocer

Movement Among Jobbing Trade, Led By Illinois Wholesale Grocers' Association, to Reduce to System Relations Between Wholesalers and Retailers As to Making Claims on Damaged Goods. Time Allowance for Report on Claim Both for Apparent and Concealed Damage.

A movement is progressing among the wholesale grocery trade of the country to reduce to a more businesslike system the relations between wholesalers and retailers, particularly as regards the making of claims for goods received in a damaged condition. The Illinois Wholesale Grocers' Association has drafted an extremely comprehensive system of rules and regulations, and has forwarded a copy of them to practically all jobbers' organizations in the country, with the suggestion that if adopted by the trade conditions would at once assume a status better both for wholesaler and retailer. The "Grocery World" has secured a copy of the Illinois rules and reproduces them verbatim regarding the matter of the highest importance:—

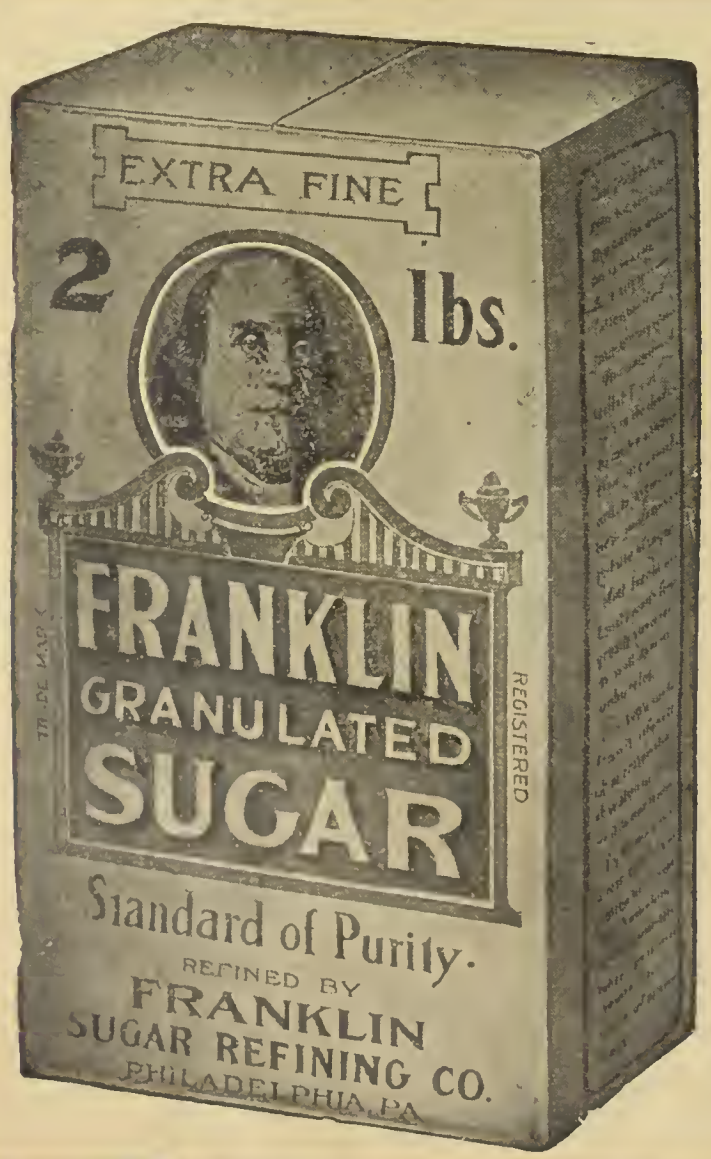
INTRODUCTION.

Recognizing that various losses are needlessly and unjustly incurred by merchants of this State because there are no uniform rules regulating the return of goods from buyer to shipper, and, in order to best conserve the interests of both retailer and wholesaler, the above named wholesalers and manufacturers, by their accredited representatives, have, after careful consideration, adopted the following rules, with interpretations as explained in notes, and authorize their publications generally to the trade to define "The Usual Business Customs" in cases to which they apply, such rules being statements of equitable and economic principles.

RULE I.

Goods should not be returned from buyer to shipper until said buyer has the proper instructions from said shipper authorizing such return. Spoiled goods must not be destroyed without authority from the shipper.

Note—If the buyer wishes to reject or refuse any goods, he should communicate with the shipper, stating fully and explicitly his grounds for such rejection. (Exception se



"I Hope I Don't Sell Sugar"

There's nothing odder than for a merchant to hope he won't sell goods, but it's a fact that many a grocer hopes "I won't sell much sugar to-day."

Why? Well, it's a lot of trouble and work and very often it doesn't pay. Very little profit in it and that little gone in overweight—"good measure."

But sell your sugar in Franklin Cartons and the weather vane will switch right around.

You can't sell too much Franklin Carton Sugar to please you. Because selling Franklin Carton Sugar is no work and no worry. You can't give overweight, and there's no way in which your profit can be stolen from you.

"Notice Cards," Rule II.) It is his duty to then hold such goods, with proper care, "Subject to shipper's order." The buyer's right to reject does not include any privilege to give disposition of goods rejected. The shipper can secure half freight rates for such return, provided, his instructions to that effect go with goods to railroad agent and are attached to the bill of lading. Therefore, for economical reasons, the shipper must justly have the opportunity of giving such instructions before any goods are returned to him. (Without a written warrant, travelling salesmen cannot authorize return of goods.)

RULE II.

The shipper does not guarantee the safe arrival of goods. His responsibility and liability ceases on obtaining a receipt in good order from transportation company. In the absence of specific instructions the shipper may rightfully presume that the buyer's order carries with it instructions to "ship in usual course of business." In so doing and in conforming to the rules and usages of transportation company, the shipper assumes no liability or responsibility for sudden or unexpected weather changes.

Note—Perishable goods are examined by the shipper at the time of shipment, and must have immediate attention and examination on receipt by buyer.

"Notice Cards" attached to packages containing perishable goods are direct instructions from shipper to buyer. If reasonable instructions so given are not promptly and fully complied with, buyer loses his right to reject such goods.

RULE III.

Shipper will receive "for collection" only buyer's claim for breakage, loss or damage in transit (if local agent refuses to adjust loss), but will make no credit allowance or payment therefor until actually collected. It is the buyer's duty to examine all goods immediately on arrival.

Note.—The buyer should not sign, or allow his drayman to sign receipt for goods to transportation company until he is certain that he has no claim for loss or damage on account shipment. He should insist upon agent of transportation company (none other can make this notation legally) making proper "notation" on freight expense bill, stating fully, exactly and explicitly the actual condition of the goods. If such notation is either insufficient or indefinite it seriously delays collection of the claim. If agent refuses to make such notation, buyer should reject all goods.

RULE IV.

The shipper (if no expressed exception) guarantees all shipments to be in merchantable condition when delivered to transportation company. He also guarantees certain classes of goods against spoilage due to any defect in manufacture, for fixed limited periods. (See Rule V.) The buyer, however, must make claim for any such defect or loss within the time limit of the guaranty covering the goods, or else waives and releases all rights under the guaranty.

Note.—All faults, defects or damages are either "apparent" or "concealed."

"Apparent damage" means any loss or damage to the goods which is or may be apparent to any reasonably cautious person on examination.

"Concealed Damage" means any loss or damage which is not discoverable on examination, but which is disclosed in the course of sale.

Example: If a case of tomatoes shows damaged labels, rusty or crushed tins, etc., this would be classed as "apparent damage," and should receive immediate attention. (See Rule V.) If another case of tomatoes while apparently in good condition on examination, but in the course of sale it is discovered that the tins contained pumpkin instead of tomatoes, or the tomatoes are too salty, or there is some other inherent defect in the tomatoes which may afterwards cause the tins to swell, this would be classed as "concealed damage." (See Rule V.)

RULE V.

The following respective time limits have been fixed to cover all cases of concealed or apparent damages:

Thirty Days.

Smoked and salt meats.
Jellies, jams, preserves, fruits.
Butters, etc., in bulk.

Sixty Days.

Minced meat in bulk, cider in wood. (Exception: On all shipments between March 1st and Oct. 1st, guaranty is "on arrival" only.)

Four Months.

Pickles in bulk or glass, of all kinds. (Exception: Dill pickles are sold at buyer's risk only.)

Six Months.

The following goods packed in glass: Maple syrup, olives, jams, jellies, preserves, fruit butters, etc.

Canned meats, soups, milk, fish, etc. (Exception: Such products as marinated herring, fillet of Herring, Bismarck herring, Brat Herring, Gaffelbiter, fillet of Anchovies, Anchovies in tins, roll mops, Appetitsild.)

Special.

Canned fruits and vegetables (not including California) are guaranteed as follows: All shipments between August 31st and February 1st are guaranteed to June 1st following. All shipments between January 31st and September 1st are guaranteed for thirty days only. California fruits and vegetables are guaranteed to June 1st following date of shipment.

On Arrival.

All other goods. They being subject to "apparent damage" only. All claims should be made immediately on actual delivery of goods. Note: As it impractical to fix an exact time limit in days or hours for such cases, this rule must be reasonably interpreted in fairness to both shipper and buyer. Any unnecessary delay should justly be considered as an excess of time limit.

RULE VI.

Negligence or carelessness on the part of the buyer nullifies his right to make claim under his guaranty.

RULE VII.

The "terms" as to payment, and the "conditions of sale" as expressed on the invoices of shipper, shall always be considered agreed terms and conditions of purchase, if no objection is made by buyer on receipt of same.

Note.—Guarantees, promises and representations made by other than the regular salesman of the shipper—such as "specialty" salesman or "factory" salesman—are often unknown to the shipper. If such guarantees, etc., are different from the terms as shown on the invoice, shipper should justly be informed at once of such difference, or the buyer should lose all rights under such guarantees, etc.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Departme and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have t several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscrib probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of w dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing winc displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangen should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is practically unchanged for the week. Values are steady and the entire line is selling at full prices. Prices in the primary markets on the other side are still firm and high. Some grades of Japans seem particularly firm. The demand for tea in a consumptive way is fairly good.

Coffee.

The market on Rio and Santos coffee has shown little change during the week, and such change as has occurred has been in the direction of a decline. The market has ruled weak to steady during the greater part of the week. The demand has been light. Mild coffees are unchanged and steady, Bogotas being particularly firm. Java and Mocha are steady and unchanged, demand fair.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no important change for the week. Raws are steady to firm, and some sales have been made at 1-32 advance. Refined sugar is unchanged, and probably will show no change in the near future. The demand for refined sugar is fair, but nothing more.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has advanced 10 points, and has carried compound syrup, both in bulk and tins, up with it one cent per gallon. The advance is due to the high price of corn. Practically all manufacturers of and dealers in syrup have joined in the syrup advance. The advance caused quite an increase in the demand, particularly with some dealers who took orders at the old price. The scarcity of staple fruits seems sure to hea stimulate the demand for sy Sugar syrup is in light deman unchanged prices. Molasses quiet and unchanged.

Fish.

The past week has been mar by a sharp advance in Irish m erel of $1 to $1.50 per barrel. winding up of summer fish is reason. From now on fatter better mackerel will come ward and will command hig prices. Norway mackerel new shores are about unchan The market is firm, and the mand fair. Cod, hake and dock are dull on spot, and rul unchanged prices. Some busi has been done in futures at prices. This year hake r about at the price of haddock haddock at about the price of Cod is ½ to 1 cent above year. Domestic sardines are changed at the last advance, in light demand. Imported dines are firm and unchan Prices on both sockeye and Alaska salmon have been na during the week. Sockeye p are $1.65 talls, $1.80 flats, $1.10 for ½ pounds coast, aga 20 cents less last year. Alaska opens at $1.15, whic also 20 cents above last y opening. Spot red Alaska is

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes of old pack s practically no change. An a age price f. o. b. is 85 cents. seys are still quoted at 90 c and spot goods, new pack cents Baltimore. Futures strong at 85 cents county packers seem reluctant to Some authorities attribute th the fact that future sales eady been very large, and ers to the cool weather and the newhat uncertain crop pros- ts. The general demand for natoes is fair. Corn is un- nged and the general demand it. Peas are active, and the her grades are now partici- ing to some extent. Prices unchanged throughout. ches are still high and un- nged, and the demand is light. grades of canned peaches are ching the highest prices for rs. Apples are firm and some ders are asking $3.25 for New rk State gallons, which is a h price. Scarcity in New rk State is the reason. South- apples average $2.65. The timore small line is unchanged fairly active. California ned goods are broken up and et.

Dried Fruits.

Nothing is doing in prunes of moment, either in spot or fu- es. The future market is still ong. Peaches are slow in ladelphia, but fairly active in w York. Prices are un- nged. Apricots are scarce and obtainable are now selling l. Apples are scarce and firm. rants are in good healthy pe. The market abroad has kened somewhat, but is dy on this side. Raisins show hing new, being still firm and et. The first lot of new for- n Valencias will be shipped week. The California raisin will be a little earlier than expected.

Beans and Peas.

ea beans have advanced 10 s, and are now quoted at $1.90 large way. Low stocks are onsible, and a firmer feeling New York State, where the wers say the crop is damaged. Michigan situation is about same. Future pea beans have anced on the above account n $1.65 to $1.78. Marrows show an advance of 10 cents, to good demand and sym- y with pea beans. California is have advanced ¼ cent in ondary markets, but are un- nged on the coast. The pri- y and secondary markets are about on a parity. Split and d peas are unchanged in price in good demand. Prices on green and Scotch peas for ober shipment have been ed during the week, on a basis of $1.70 for green and $1.80 for Scotch.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound on both solids and prints. This is due to the falling off in the make of fancy butter as well as to the increased demand. The immediate future of the butter market is in doubt, but unless there comes the increase in supply which is due at this season prices will advance again. Under-grade creameries are hardly as scarce as the finer grades, but all have advanced in sympathy with the finest. The future price depends largely on the weather.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at the recent advance of 1 cent per dozen. The advance was due to the good demand for fancy eggs and the falling off in production. The present outlook is not for any change in prices, as there is likely to be an increase in the supply as the weather cools. The cooler weather will enable holders of storage eggs to withdraw them, as they can be sold at a profit on the present market basis. The bulk of the receipts of eggs are now good enough for table grades.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at the recent advance of ½ cent per pound, due to the falling off in the milk supply of the producing sections, as well as the demand for storage purposes. The quality of the present make is very fancy; plenty good enough for carrying purposes. The price now is considerably above normal, and no advance is looked for in the near future. Under grades have advanced in sympathy with better grades.

Provisions.

Everything in smoked meats is dull at unsettled prices. Some packers are endeavoring to get full values, but others are willing to shade ¼ cent to make clearance, as the busy season is about over for smoked meats. From all appearances, we will have lower prices on smoked meats in the near future. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ¼ cent. We are approaching one of the best consumptive months for lard, and the price may advance even further. Compound lard is unchanged, though cotton oil has advanced again. This will probably soon cause compound lard to advance and remain on an advanced basis until the new crop of cotton oil is available in October. Barrel pork and canned meats are unchanged and dull. Dried beef has advanced 1 to 2 cents on all cuts.

Produce.

Cabbage, 10 to 15 cents per basket, $1.25 to $3 per 100, fair demand; savoy cabbage, 40 to 60 cents per barrel, demand slow; potatoes, 40 cents per basket, demand fair; peas, $1 to $1.50 per bushel basket, demand fair, squash, 5 to 15 cents per basket, demand poor; cucumbers, 15 to 40 cents per basket, demand good; turnips, 25 cents per basket, $1.25 per barrel, demand fair; string beans, 25 to 45 cents, demand good; lima beans, flats, 40 to 50 cents per basket; improved, 60 to 75 cents; shelled, 12 to 15 cents per quart, demand good; carrots, 50 to 60 cents per basket, demand fair; eggplants, 15 to 25 cents per basket, demand fair and good; onions, yellow, 50 to 65 cents per basket; white, 80 cents per basket, demand good; peppers, 15 to 20 cents per basket, fair to good; beets, $1.50 to $1.75 per barrel, fair demand; radishes, $1.50 to $2 per 100, fair to good demand; spinach, $1.75 to $2 per barrel, demand fair; salad, York State, 75 cents per dozen, fair demand.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.40 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25; 7-hands, 65 to 90 cents; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents; red bananas, $1 to $2 per bunch, demand good for good fruit; California oranges, $3.65 to $5 per box, slow demand; pineapples, $3.50 to $5.50 per box, demand good; lemons, $3 to $5 per box, demand fair; limes, 60 to 80 cents per 100, demand slow.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; large jumbo, $1.65 per bushel; green peanuts, choice, 5¾ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; large jumbo, 8 cents, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, Marbots, 12½ cents per pound; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand slow.

MARKET NOTES.

Very fine Elberta peaches are coming from Delaware, packed in crates holding about 1⅓ truck baskets. The ordinary grades range from $1.50 to $2.50 per basket. The demand for peaches is fair, considering the price.

Cantaloupes are plenty and comparatively low. The best near-by fruit brings $1 per basket, and from that the price declines to nothing, according to quality. The quality of the near-by cantaloupes is fair, but very uncertain. The season for Colorado cantaloupes has scarcely opened. A good crop is expected. Tennessee cantaloupes of very fine quality are coming forward at $3.50 per crate.

Canners are now getting second early tomatoes at 20 to 25 cents. The first crop fruit they can buy at 12 cents. The jobbing range for tomatoes is 25 to 30 cents. Receipts are large and the demand fair.

New-crop apples have a wide range—30 cents to $1 per basket. The demand is good.

Sweet potatoes from near-by points range from $1.25 to $1.50. The demand is fair.

Packers Kicking Against Federal Meat Law.

Slaughterers and packers of meat products have opened fire on the Federal meat inspection law with what they believe to be a gun of large calibre. To be more explicit, they are giving to consumers reasons from the packers' standpoint why they (the consumers) are compelled to pay existing prices for their supplies. The first argument advanced is that under the workings of the new law, and the methods of inspection in vogue, the slaughterers and packers are compelled to shoulder the loss of all condemned cattle and swine sent to the fertilizer heap as unfit for food purposes. Recently, however, the packers have rebelled to a certain extent, and are now refusing to buy female cattle, which are particularly subject to tuberculosis and other prohibited diseases, except under guarantee. For all other kinds of cattle and swine condemned the loss falls on the packer. They do not deem this fair, but even in the case of the very inferior stock the producers, it is said, are protesting agai making returns for condem tions.

Manufacturers who have adopted p mium schemes to create a demand their products, have always given premiums to consumers. Where ma facturers have offered an incentive grocers to push their goods, the incen has always been small. It had to small, because no individual manu turer could afford to give a grocer i his individual profits anything more portant than a silk hat, an umbrella. But when twenty or more promin manufacturers, whose products are by grocers everywhere, set aside a of their advertising appropriations t into a fund to buy something substan for the merchant, that something rep sents an article of sufficient value make it worth the grocer's while to a real interest in pushing the goods the manufacturers who take this me of showing their appreciation of the g cer's services. That the importance this matter may be plain to you, fig out the following: The Knickerboc Chocolate Co., New York, gives yo quantity of Universal coupons with t Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better go ever came into this market. Add t coupons to the ones you get with products of the following firms and will find you can save enough coup in three months to entitle you to a fi class set of harness, a platform scale a roll-top desk. In six months you save enough to get a good runabout a year a good piano:

The American Premium Co., Phila phia; Wrigley Manufacturing Co., Ph delphia; Franklin Baker Co., Phila phia; the Porcela Co., Philadelphia; Canna & Fraser Co., Philadelphia; J Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Weber Loesch, Philadelphia; Wm. Dreydopp Sons, Philadelphia; J. W. Beards Sons, New York; Dixon Crucible Jersey City; Sea Foam Baking Pow Co., New York; Flodon Manufactu Co., Boston, Mass.; Potter & Wright ton, Boston, Mass.

Within a month a number of o big local houses will join this enterpr Don't you think this matter is import enough for you to push the goods these firms? Don't you think manufacturers who have been been to recognize the grocer's right of sideration should have the groc hearty co-operation?

Johnson, the Retail Grocer

Retails for cash over 300 pounds of sliced dried beef a week and about twice this amount of sugar—sugar, clear, bright, sweet and sparklingly beautiful, and yet this sugar adds nothing to Johnson's prestige or profit Why? Because 96 competitors retail sugar just as nice and quite as cheap and give credit besides.

Johnson Builds the Famous Patented Eversharp Slicing Machine

Which slices dried beef to perfection, each slice full size, transparently thin and so smooth it shines like a polished mirror. Wafer slices so invitingly handsome, so moist, soft and juicy, and such delicious eating. They command 36 cents a pound and show a pleasing profit of more than 45 dollars a week. While every slice eaten adds to Johnson's popularity and prosperity.

Johnson rents out four Eversharp machines in New Brunswick and allows no more. Is the financial intuition of a Rockefeller required to choose between conducting the dried beef business on the old style, free for all, profitless sugar selling system or a more pleasant business, enormously enlarged, with the number of Eversharp slicing machines in a city limited to a few plucky, enterprising up-to-date grocers? Send for a sample of sandwich sliced beef, and you'll decide to cut out all competition by installing a patent-protected Eversharp slicer.

litor of "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I enclose a few clipngs from our local paper for your iticism. The "ads" are changed ery day, but usually run along the me line of talk.

Yours respectfully,
L. G. HARTMANN.

Ir. Hartmann is doing pretty d advertising. He sends me a ch of clippings, each of an adtisement about six inches douolumn. It is evident that Mr. rtmann has taken care with his ertising, as their wording and ngement show thorough prepion. I reproduce the two ch I consider best:—

Hartmann's Store News.

Hartmann's Aromatic Spices.

Spice fragrance flavor is as essential as spice purity. Hartmann's Aromatic Spices are not only absolutely pure, but also possess an aromatic flavor found in no other brand. Can't describe them, but compare them with the best you know of and if not superior we want them back.

Hartman's 60c Young Hyson Tea.

Our most popular, 60c tea. It is a true Moyune tea with a smooth, rich and tasty character

10c Carton

Hartman's Mixed Spices

A choice combination of pure spices for pickling. Blended with the idea of producing richest flavor.

10c Carton

Chapman's Vanilla

A really high grade vanilla. The flavor is strong and rich. A little of it goes far. And imparts a delightful taste to pastry and desert 15c bottle.

Hartman's Pearl Tapioca

Best quality, clean, even grains for the delicious pudding. You should not overlook it in ordering.

10c Carton

Heniz's Mustard Dressing

Ever try Heinz's mustard dressing? It adds appetizing properties to meats, salads, and gives a keener edge to the appetite. It is a popular relish

15c Bottle.

Prosperity Soap Powder

Extra large packages and the powder of good quality. It is a great labor lightener and does its work quickly and well.

5c Carton.

repeat, these are good, meaty ertisements. I think they ld be improved, however, by minating the standing head—artmann's Store News." That s absolutely no good. I supe the idea is to identify the adtisement so that it can always be ognized as Hartmann's space. t the advertisement is always the same, and that fact is alone ficient to identify it, if any ntification is necessary. As a tter of fact, I don't think idencation is necessary in a grocery advertisement. Make it look readable, as Mr. Hartmann does. and it will be seen and read, too, if as readable as it looks. Another reason for cutting out the standing head is that, being the first thing in the advertisement, it must necessarily be the biggest thing in it, and the real head must be set in smaller type than it deserves. Two heads always spoil an advertisement's appearance to me.

* * *

To illustrate what I mean by this, I have had the introduction of one of these advertisements reset, without the standing head:—

Hartmann's Aromatic Spices

Spice fragrance flavor is as essential as spice purity. Hartmann's Aromatic Spices are not only absolutely pure, but also possess an aromatic flavor found in no other brand. Can't describe them, but compare them with the best you know of and if not superior we want them back.

Hartman's Store News.

Buying Horses and Groceries.

The only absolutely sure way to get a good horse is to select from a stable that hasn't any poor ones--no matter how little you know about horses, you can not fail that way. Likewise with groceries; buy from the grocer whom you can trust. From the man you know doesn't sell shoddy goods, and you can't fail to get the best and freshest every time.

Hartman's 16c Coffee

Are you particular about your coffee and still do not want to pay more than 16c a lb for it? Then we urge you to use our 16c. It is really the best coffee at the price we know of.

Vienna Sausage.

These dainty little sausages have become general favorites. May be served hot or cold. Difficult to tell which way they are the most popular.

10c Can.

U-need-a Biscuits

The ever popular U-need-a Biscuit, always found in the picnic lunch or luncheon at home. One of the best wafers baked.

5c package.

Hartman's Reliable Breakfast Bacon is for particular people. Sweetest flavor, the result of perfect curing Fresh baked Jelly Rolls received every Saturday morning.

As for the wording of these advertisements, it is just about what it ought to be, in my judgment. Short, snappy and right to the point. It is poorly printed, however, but that Mr. Hartmann can't help, though his newspaper printer can. Either more ink should be used, or the form underlaid or overlaid so as to produce a heavier impression. Then the word "Heinz" is not spelled Heniz.

* * *

I am confident that this sort of advertising, if regularly kept up and used in good papers, will pay well.

Oleo Production Increasing.

According to the figures contained in the preliminary report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the amount of oleomargarine on which the Federal tax was paid during the year ending June 30, 1907, was 68,988,850 pounds. This is over 15,000,000 pounds more than in the previous year, and indicates the first really marked stimulus in production since the enforcement of the prohibitory tax. Oleo production, as indicated by the tax paid on it, is shown as follows for the year before the law was put into effect, and for each year since. The trend of production may be followed from these figures:—

1902	123,133,853
1903	72,848,761
1904	48,071,850
1905	49,881,644
1906	53,146,659
1907	68,988,850

The first Jersey watermelons are in and range from 25 to 40 cents. The quality is good and the demand active.

Here Is a Good Scheme!

Grocers sometimes demonstrate these with fine results. The demonstration shows two things—first, the ease with which beef tea, bouillon or soup is made from these capsules, one of which has simply to be dropped in a cup of hot water; then it shows the delicious, spicy flavor.

You can sell hundreds of boxes, and every one at a profit.

A window display of German-American Coffee would do you a lot of good. You see these coffees are not like other coffees. They come from a different place than most—Central America—and they are different in the cup.

You could fix up a display of them that would fairly drag people in to buy. After that there would be no dragging.

We've Made "EXTON" Oyster Crackers for 60 Years

In itself, and by itself, that fact is significant.

Nothing but a superior article could last so long, and none but a very superior cracker could retain its leadership as the "EXTON" Oyster Cracker has done.

It MADE the standard of quality by which all other oyster crackers can safely be judged, and by which they HAVE been judged.

It's the Cracker King now as it has always been, and makes its sixty-first annual bow to the trade with a vigor that's growing steadily.

It's ready for the fall business whenever you are, and guarantees the same ideal quality which has made the name "EXTON" famous wherever oysters are known.

Pennsylvania Pure Food Work for Anoth Month

Latest Number of the Monthly Bulletin Devotes More Attent to Editorial Matter. Advises Retailers to Destroy Old Goo Long List of Concerns Selling Oleo for Butter.

The monthly bulletin of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department, reporting the work up to July, 15, 1907, just received, devotes considerable of its space to editorial matter. A few selections from the editorial pages are as follows:—

NOT A PROPER LABEL.

In the mail received by the Dairy and Food Commissioner the other day was a letter containing a sample label. The manufacturers desired to use it on certain of their goods, but wished to know whether it complied with the requirements of the pure food laws and the regulations adopted therewith. By way of reply a copy of the law and of the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof was mailed to the inquirer.

But did the label meet the requirements of the act of Assembly? It was couched in these words: "Concentrated Extract of Pine Apple." This sentence was printed in large black letters, and immediately attracted the eye, as it was certainly intended to do. Directly under the words "Pine Apple" appeared in very small and inconspicuous type the sinister declaration, "Artificial." It was evidently not the purpose of the designer of that label to particularly attract the attention of the purchaser to the artificial character of the preparation.

The truth is there is no genuine extract of pine apple in the market. Many of this sort of flavors are artificial, made usually from compound ethers, and of the whole lot "pine apple extract" is one of the worst sinners. The manufacturers of these artificial compounds are permitted to make and sell them under the law, but they must label them accurately, so that neither the retail dealer nor the purchaser is likely to be deceived.

If the manufacturers in question had thought a moment, or if they had wished to be perfectly fair and absolutely honest with the consuming public they would have labeled this particular article "Artificial Pine Apple." That would have expressed the exact truth; it would have deceived no one; it would have complied with the rules of the Division. The word "Artificial," of course, should be in the same type as the words "Pine Apple." Under such circumstances, the article could be sold without deception and the law would protect the vendor, so long as it contained no substance injurious to health. Attention is directed to that section of the rules and regulations of the Division referring to misbranding, which will be found on another page of this number of the Bulletin. Those who scrupulously follow the directions therein found will find themselves in perfect harmony with the law.

Retail dealers should inaugurate a general house-cleaning crusade at this time. It is likely that some have goods on their shelves that have been there for years. They are scarcely as fresh as they were at t moment of purchase; besides, t retailer has forgotten from whom procured them or is in great dou about it. Even if he is sure of t dealer, it would be extremely di cult to convince the latter that it his duty to guarantee goods whi passed out of his possession yea ago. In some instances the whol saler or jobber has gone out of bu ness. To sell such goods would to invite prosecution. A little pr caution and prudence might sa much trouble and expense. Eve retail dealer doing business in Pen sylvania should clean house, taki care to destroy all goods the pu chase of which he cannot identi and for which he has no guarant Every retailer should take spec pains to get a re-invoice of all goo the purchase of which he can loca as well as an invoice of all fre goods purchased, both bearing t legal guarantee. Each wholes dealer or jobber should demand a secure from the manufacturers indemnifying bond, certifying th all goods purchased are up to t standard of purity demanded by t national and State laws.

"Butter" Holds No Trade

Mrs. Smith can get "butter" at any grocery store, but she may not be able to get Gurnse Butter at any store but yours.

Which means that the grocer who simply sells "butter" can't expect to use it to tie customers to him, particularly since the grade varies so.

But Gurnse Butter is something definite. It means much more than "butter," and would even if "butter" were as good in every respect as Gurnse. Customers can come back for it and be sure they are getting the same thing.

Gurnse Butter is the perfection of sweet, pure creamery butter, fresh and fancy all the time.

The Five Brethren.

I am writing this on a Wednesday evening. You have heard me speak of my Aunt Mary. I'm spending the night with her. They've all gone to Wednesday night prayer meeting—the bell is ringing now.

Aunt Mary wanted me to go along, but I didn't feel quite up to it, so I made them go and stayed quietly and respectably at home. The girls stare at me so much when I go to church that I get out of it whenever I can.

Nobody in the house but me. The bell is ringing yet—has to work harder in summer to get the faithful out.

This is the regular prayer meeting night everywhere. In all the other towns the church bells are ringing and the good people are gathering.

At least some of them are good.

In five towns I know well, some of 'em separated by hundreds of miles, five prayer meetings are being held to-night. In each, one of the leading brethren will be a man I also know well. All but one of the five I've sold goods to off and on for years.

Take the first one, Brother Jones. He's a shouting Methodist. I heard him make a prayer once that stands in my memory as the finest emotional oratorical effort I ever heard.

I'll admit it's a pretty cold-blooded thing to size up a prayer—like listening at the keyhole while a man talks to his Maker and then picking flaws in what he says.

But this prayer, I say again, was a peach! Anybody who listened to it would be willing to swear that the man who made it was clean and straight and decent to the last inch of skin.

Brother Jones is a general storekeeper and is reported to be rich. A good business man. Yet I caught him in a lie as neat and clean as any man was ever caught. I was trying to sell him a certain line of goods that was handled by only two other firms in the United States. He said he had a lower offer from another house. He didn't tell me which one, b it must have been one of the tw because there were no more.

Before I cut my own price asked the salesmen of the oth two houses whether they h named him a lower price. Th both said no, and both said t Brother Jones had told them had a better offer too.

Now both these fellows known for years, and both trust with my last cent. If th say a thing's so, it's so, and fight on it.

Brother Jones lied, that's simply to play the very comm trick of setting one seller agai another.

The next time I saw him I liberately gave him a chance say the same thing again. said it all right. I didn't say word but I looked him straight the eye until his sanctimoni old face got red and his e dropped. He gave me an or too.

He lied. And I have no do he often lies in the same w Maybe in his eyes it isn't lyin simply business. But I don't it business.

Yet in his local prayer meet to-night I doubt if his unctu tones are booming out any less loudly because he's a l In fact, I really question whet he knows he's a liar.

There's Brother Smith. A other good prayer meeting n —takes just as much part Brother Jones, though he's prayer.

You can size Brother Smith by the fact that one day in store I offered to bet one of clerks, in his hearing, a quar that it would rain before night.

Brother Smith rebuked Said I was contemplating a sin

Yet the good Brother Smith as mean a man as God ever m Parsimonious to the last degr My own firm has caught him ti and time again making fa claims so he could get deducti from his bills. And he alw takes sixty days to pay, and wh ever a firm will stand it, alw grabs the discount.

Nevertheless, the pastor Brother Smith's church would know what to do without him the Wednesday night pra meeting.

Brother Williams, the thi leads the Wednesday night si ng in his prayer meeting. His own is two hundred miles at east from both the other two, but Brother Williams is tarred with exactly the same stick.

One day about six months ago I went to Brother Williams' store and was told by one of his clerks that he was back in the office and to go right in. The door was ajar, and so I made no noise opening it. The good brother was bending over a ledger on the standing desk and beside him was his lady cashier. The good brother's arm was around the cashier's waist. But maybe you'll say I have no right to impute any wrong from that. True, I haven't. But, nevertheless I do, because even before I saw that I had sized up the fellow as that kind of a hair pin.

They didn't hear me, and I backed out. To this day Brother Williams don't know that I saw what I saw, But he's a beautiful prayer meeting singer. And they say that when he lets his voice out on "Shall We Gather at the River," you'll think you're already there.

Brother Haines and Brother Charles are so near alike I can punch 'em. Both merchants well known to me, and both hot church workers. One of 'em treats his wife like a perfect dog—it's the scandal of the little town. The other lets his own mother take charity from the local poor committee, though mighty well fixed himself.

Mean, cold and low-down heartless! Yet both good Christians and both pillars of the church.

Yes, I know you're going to say that I oughtn't to judge religion by its weakest elements. I don't. The point that I can't get clear is this:—

All of these five men would swear they had religion. But this religion that they claim don't seem to keep 'em straight or decent. Are they lying when they say they've got religion? Is that it? All right, then they're impostors and hypocrites and ought not to be allowed in the church, so outsiders like me could make the mistake of judging the whole church by 'em.

I never for a minute believe such cattle really have religion, no matter what they say about it. But the trouble is that—here comes Aunt Mary; I'll have to knock off.

Corn is weak and 60 cents per basket will buy the best. The quality is good and the demand fairly active.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

VIII.—Charging for Wasted Time.

Are you really busy all day long, or do you just think you are?

Judging from past experience, the writer believes that the average retailer in the small town wastes at least a quarter of his time. He not only wastes the time, but is at the same time firmly convinced that he is the busiest man in the town and does not have half enough time to take care of his business right.

The average retailer will not only waste a great deal of time between jobs in the store, but he will even go outside and play croquet, pitch horse shoes, or waste an hour or so in some other occupation while he has work to do inside, which, if properly cared for, will increase his profits considerably in the course of a year.

A great many retailers fail to realize that their time is worth money, and that every minute they take from their business they are cheating that business out of. They are not accustomed to put a price on their own time, even though most men draw a certain salary from their business each month.

One retailer recently brought himself to realize the value of his own time by charging himself up with every minute thus wasted at the same rate he allowed himself as salary. It was a great surprise to him the way his salary was thus reduced, and any retailer who will honestly follow up such a plan for a month will see where there is a leak in his business at a very vital point, and once such a leak is found, he is no merchant if he does not stop it.

Proceedings of the Eleventh Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association

Unusually Successful Meeting Held in York on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, August 20th, 21st and 22d. Unusually Able Addresses Delivered on Various Trade Subjects. Work of Local Associations for the Past Year. Unique Questions in the Question Box. Stenographic Report of the Proceedings.

Special report to the "Grocery World."

York, Pa., August 26, 1907.

FIRST SESSION.

TUESDAY MORNING, August 20, 1907.

The Eleventh Annual Convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania was called to order by Mr. W. H. McClellan, of York, in the Court House, York, Pa., at 10.30 o'clock A. M., Tuesday, August 20, 1907. In opening the convention Mr. McClellan said:

Gentlemen, as chairman of the Convention Committee, it is my duty to call to order the Eleventh Annual Convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania. It is not for me to extend to you a formal welcome; that pleasure will devolve upon others. I do wish to say, however, with all seriousness, that we are glad you are here. The time for which we have planned, thought and laid awake at nights has come at last. We trust that you will be doing something while in the convention assembled, and we will try to keep you busy between times by social features, of which we will tell you later. I will call now upon the Rev. T. S. Woods, a member of the New Brighton Association, to invoke a divine blessing.

(After the invocation by the Rev. T. S. Woods, Mr. McClellan introduced the next speaker as follows:)

There are cities of the first, second and other classes; there are first-class, second-class and third-class Mayors of cities. The Mayor of our city is a first-class Mayor of a third-class city for the present. When the Hundred Thousand Club and the Progressive League get through with their work we will be in the first class, I suppose. It would give me great pleasure to introduce to you our Mayor, J. St. Clair McCall, but his enforced absence from the city prevents him from making an address. In his absence, however, his mantle has fallen upon a worthy successor, the City Clerk, Mr. Charles P. Shreiner, and we know that he will give an address of welcome for the whole of York.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

MR. CHARLES P. SHREINER: Mr. President and gentlemen of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, I deeply regret the absence of Mayor McCall this morning, but he was unavoidably called away, and delegated to me the pleasant duty of welcoming to York the merchants of the State of Pennsylvania. I can assure you, gentlemen, that it does give me a great deal of pleasure to welcome to our city a band of representative citizens such as are gathered here this morning. We feel safe in extending a welcome to you, and opening wide our gates, giving you the freedom of the city of York during your visit here. We trust that your deliberations may be for the benefit of all the municipalities you represent, and all that is done here during your visit may redound to your benefit and your pleasure, and that when you leave York it will be with pleasant recollections of your visit to our city.

MR. McCLELLAN: The address of welcome on behalf of the local association should have been made by President Morgan E. Gipe, but on account of sickness in the family he is unavoidably detained out of the city. There is but one ex-President in the United States, but our association is greater than the United States because we have two ex-Presidents. The senior one has kindly consented to fill the breach, and we know he will do it well. It gives me pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Edward E. Johnson.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME ON BEHALF OF YORK MERCHANTS.

MR. EDWARD E. JOHNSON: Gentlemen, for your information, I will say, I sell corn before it is popped; oats before it is flaked, and I sell wheat before it is puffed. (Laughter.) So you will know my position, and will understand that you cannot expect very much from such a source.

The unavoidable absence of Mr. Morgan E. Gipe, President of the organization, has forced upon me the duty of delivering the address of welcome. A man went into a cookroom and ordered a meal. Then he waited for it to be served. A long while he waited, half an hour at least, but not so much as a slice of bread was brought him. Finally the meal came, but the man refused to take it. "I have waited so long here," he said, "and the air is so thick and heavy with food odors, that I have lost my appetite. The fat and grease must have entered my pores, nourishing me, as it were, by absorption. I am no longer hungry. I will not accept the meal." The cook became furiously angry and insisted he must be paid. They finally agreed upon an old man as umpire. After hearing the evidence he said: "The one who ordered the meal must take the money it cost and put it between two plates. The jingle must be the cook's pay, for the smell of the food satisfied the guest." (Laughter.) The president was to do this work in an artistic style, and now you will have to be satisfied with the jingle.

SUCCESS.

"Success to our army, success to our fleet,
May our foes be compelled to bow down to our feet."

OUR INCOME.

"May we have a head to earn, and a heart to spend."

THE MEN WE LOVE.

"He who thinks the most good and speaks less ill of his neighbors."

I am certain it is not necessary to assure you of the pleasure it affords me to meet and welcome, on behalf of the merchants of York, the merchants of this grand old Keystone State.

MR. McCLELLAN: It has been said of Napoleon that he could answer three persons on different subjects at the same time. History repeats itself, and from away up in Erie comes a man who, when the question box is opened, will fling out answers, like greased lightning, that will be sure to strike. Mr. A. M. Howes, Secretary of the State Association, will now address you in its behalf.

RESPONSE TO WELCOME ON BEHALF OF THE RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

MR. A. M. HOWES: Mr. Chairman, city officials, committees and merchants of York: On behalf of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania and its affiliated bodies, I thank you for your cordial greetings. We have every reason to believe that this meeting will be the most successful, the most harmonious and the most fruitful of any of our annual gatherings. Ten years ago, at Philadelphia, the State organization was born, with six associations represented there. The Merchants' Association of York made its first appearance at our second convention, at Reading, where it was so ably represented by its secretary, Mr. C. A. Geesey, that the delegates, recognizing his fitness and the value of his services, made him, at that, his first convention, a member of the State Executive Committee, and for three successive terms since have re-elected him to that position. This of itself should indicate the value of his services and the connection of the Merchants' Association of York. No one within our ranks has been more loyal or faithful or helpful. It has been our pleasure at various conventions to meet several of the merchants of York, and in every case our experience has been helpful to us. Before we came here we were assured of this cordial welcome. We had learned to admire the character of your representatives, their ability and their love of home. I believe that there is no trait in the character of the representatives of York that has impressed itself so forcefully upon us as their love of their beautiful city, and I am sure that those of us who are here representing 134 affiliated associations, covering nearly all the leading cities and towns of this State, are not disappointed in what we find here. The slogan "Keep your eye on York" has become familiar to every association worker in the State. Your municipal advertising has caused York to become generally known as the third manufacturing city of the State. We expect at this convention to build for still greater organization. Our successes and failures have been but tests of the strength of our organization movement. There are 471 towns, each of which should endeavor to have a live merchants' association, and our work here to-day, in view of our experience in the past, is to be largely one of planning for future development. These conventions are the oasis in the desert of our commercial life, where we gather new inspiration and new vigor for the battles of the future. It is here that we gather to compare our experience, and gird up our strength, and go home and enthuse our people upon the question of organization development for another year.

I feel sure, Mr. President, that those who have written me in connection with the work of the convention, and from the faces of those present, that we will not regret our coming to York. I want to say that we appreciate your hospitality, and I am sure that when we have gone home you will be pleased with us and satisfied that we have not abused our privileges. I thank you. (Applause.)

MR. McCLELLAN: We have heard from a preacher, a lawyer and an ex-President, but we will now hear from a merchant who is in a line of business that would not be very profitable among the Hottentots, but without which civilized natives could not well get along—the leading clothier of the Oil City Association, Mr. S. W. McCuen, who will deliver the response to the welcome on behalf of the merchants.

RESPONSE TO WELCOME ON BEHALF OF THE MERCHANTS.

MR. S. W. McCUEN: Mr. Chairman and brother merchants: To me has been assigned the duty of expressing our thanks to the York merchants for the kind hospitality, their warm welcome and their glad hand, which has been extended to us in such a pleasing manner by Mr. Johnson. Now, President Kaiser and some of the older members here will appreciate the difficulty of my trying to say anything new or old after our worthy Secretary has spoken. After Mr. Howes has had his say there is usually nothing left to be said. (Applause.) For you know that it is his habit to leave no subject untouched. Let me add, in justice to Mr. Howes, that he touches nothing that he does not adorn. (Applause.) I admit that I am a little overawed by my surroundings this morning. When a merchant comes into a courthouse he scents trouble. (Laughter.) I have wondered if there was any significance to be attached to the fact that these York merchants have secured for our meeting place this temple of justice, this beautiful new courtroom. Now, we are told that the courthouse is the place where some people receive a passport to two other institutions, where you are further entertained at the county's expense (laughter)—two institutions which possess a special horror to the merchant, who works all days to keep out, and sometimes his sleep is a terrible nightmare on account of them—the jail and the poorhouse. (Laughter and applause.) I wondered if these York merchants were trying to have a little fun with us when they brought us up to this courthouse. I wondered if they were experimenting with us a little to see if we had courage. I want to say, as I look around here, that there are a lot that are not in jail nor the poorhouse, either. President Kaiser still lives. I am told that Smedley is still abroad, and that Malloy, of Williamsport, and even Amos Bloom, of Sunbury—I am sorry he is not here—are still on deck. These gentlemen know that we have succeeded in passing, without veto, our bill on the pure food trust, and that lessens the chances for jail of some of us. And then you know the trading stamp is a back number, and that lessens the chances for the poorhouse. (Applause and laugbter.)

There is another thing: If Governor Stuart had seen fit to sign the garnishment bill I believe we could have called the bluff on the York merchants this morning, and told them to bring on their jail and their poorhouse, and we would inspect them. (Laughter.) For no newspaper reporter, suffering from the biggest kind of a pipe-dream, would ever accuse a retail merchant of having anything to do with that Harrisburg trouble down there. There was nothing retail about that. (Laughter.)

There is a libel being circulated by the press against the merchants, against the merchants of this and every State, and I want to nail that base fabrication right here in the shadow of the jail, as it were, in what I say in refutation of this base calumny. Now, I don't believe these malicious newspapers, as a rule, are as fair to the business man as they ought to be. This may have originated in the brain of some writer suffering from brainstorm, and it is to the effect that the Golden Rule, that matchless law given to us by Christ Himself in his sermon on the mount, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," is incompatible with modern business methods, and that a merchant using it would fail utterly and go to the poorhouse; that the Golden Rule to be made applicable to modern business needs would have to be the Golden Rule that David Harum speaks of, "Do unto others, as they would do you, but do them first." (Laughter.) Now, merchants all know that there are some truth in newspapers, notably the advertisement of the retail merchant. That is truth of itself. Then there is usually a grain of truth in most newspaper articles, but this article is absolutely false. The facts are directly the opposite. There is not a retail business of any consequence in this country that is not carried on according to the Golden Rule. There is not a merchant of any prominence,—not a successful merchant in America that has not used this Golden Rule in the conduct of his business, and the more he uses it the more successful he is. Its use is almost universal. Why? Because it pays. Now, I don't know how many years, a hundred or a thousand years, it took the merchants to find out that honesty is the best policy, but I do know that all successful merchants (and every merchant of any intelligence to-day knows it) have gone a step further, and they have found out that it pays to use the Golden Rule in their dealings with their patrons. It pays. And right here is the point I want to make concerning this Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania. A great many of you have seen some of the advantages of organization. Mr. Howes can talk of that to you by the hour, and, among other things, he can tell you how to circumvent the most arrogant of trusts, the insurance combine; Mr. Smedley can tell you how save money on your purchase; Mr. Malloy c tell you how to reduce your expenses, and one telephone company do the work of tw like they did up in Williamsport (laughter Mr. Bloom—I am sorry Amos is not here—c tell you how to keep out the peddlers—c but one (laughter); Mr. Spangler, Mr. Ritte house, and last, but not least, John A. Gre of the National Association, can tell you—a tell it to you eloquently—the beauties of wor ing together for the common good.

But, gentlemen, above all these,—above these, I say, more money in the merchan pocket, and other advantages come from t decent feeling between competitors in the bu ness. Now, I do not have to tell to an as ciation of merchants just what I mean. Y all know that ruinous price-cutting, untime sales of seasonable merchandise at a loss wh goods ought to be paying you a profit—the and other cutthroat methods are unworthy good business men, and I believe our Assoc tion is going to put an end to that. I kn of two towns this season where the merchan made agreements, and stuck to them, that th would not cut an article of summer mercha dise until the first day of August.

I do not want to preach to you. I leave t moral side altogether out of the question. will pay, I say, for the merchants to use th same rule they have found so necessary their dealings with their patrons—to use th rule with their competitors—as ye would th they should do unto you, do ye even so them. (Applause.)

MR. McCLELLAN: It now becomes painful duty to leave this position. In doi so I will be succeeded by a gentleman w has been President of the State Associati ever since its organization, and of the Phi delphia local association for nine years. Tho of you who have been attending conventions the past will recognize that he is the man the place; those of you who are attending convention for the first time will learn th fact. I now have the pleasure of vacating favor of Mr. Albert Kaiser, President of t Association.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CONVENTIO

President Albert Kaiser at this point tc charge of the convention and, in doing spoke as follows:

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Gentlemen representing the city of Yo retail merchants of York, and retail mercha of the State of Pennsylvania: It is with small honor that I stand before you to-day. am not in the habit of making a speech, a I think it is because I am unable to make speech that I have been continued in the h ored office for such a length of time. (Lau ter.) I have been very careful to guard a protect myself against your expecting a spe of me in asking the gentleman I had invited precede me, who did it so ably, and expres enthusiastically and sentimentally this gr movement among the Pennsylvania mercha for the uplifting not only of merchandizi but for the uplift of the Commonwealth a its municipalities. Last evening I was invi out of the hotel to inspect one of the mod products of York, a new automobile. In lo ing over it my friend Howes tooted the ho One of the gentlemen twitted him on it, a Howes said he wanted to see what kind o noise it made. I have asked Howes to addr you to-day so that you would learn his tc in the first place, and in the second place, that I would have nothing left to say. I dc care to do much repeating. (Laughter.)

According to a modern philosopher, it more difficult to tell what you know than hide that which you do not know. That another reason for keeping the speech short.

We have learned for years back of the gr enterprise and ambition of the citizens of Yo Those of you who have had the privilege a honor of coming in contact with the rep sentatives of this enterprising city have learn what significance the great red eye has. It not a vague slogan; it is the star which sho forth the sentiment of love for home and c It is the emblem that flashes forward reflection of the heart from every citizen the town, loved by its citizens. I say sentiment of that is flashed into our mi from year to year, and sent many of us ho with the resolution to better love our ho city and work for its uplift and its advan ment. We have learned that in the city York they do things. They tell the story a traveling man who stopped in York a having become somewhat imbued with spirit, liked the town, but he was obliged leave, and gave instructions at the hotel d to call him to catch an early train. When was called, he said to the messenger he wo not take that train, but would wait for next, but the messenger said, "You left a for this train, and this train you'll tak (Laughter.) And that train he took. have learned the hospitality of the citizens York, we have felt it, although we have been with them before. I remember a st told of the hospitality of this city, and it specially practiced by one of the hotel p prietors, who, in order to show his good f ing and extraordinary hospitality, was alw looking to give something extra to his patro A traveling man went there, and left a call the desk for 6.30 o'clock to catch an e morning train. The proprietor rapped at door, the man woke up and heard the p prietor say: "Four o'clock; two hours m to sleep." (Laughter.)

I noted in the remarks of the City Cl Mr. Shreiner, that during the tumultuous ti of the Revolution the Congress came up York for six months and was able to h itself. I defy anybody or anything to h itself in York to-day. He tells us to take the city. I do not believe, despite all ity of the officers and the ability of the chants gathered here to-day, if we com- d, we would be able to take in the city, if some of us are not taken in before we ve will be lucky. (Laughter.)

he Retail Merchants' Association of Penn- ania, gathered as it is here to-day, attend- its convention, at the close of ten years' gress, coming from a little organization, esents 134 localities—a marvelous growth. ! when we look back upon that progress, as ave the honor and privilege of doing, and ng its progress, its development, and the lts of its influence through this broad e, and to watch the effect of this influence, many of us had an opportunity to do in risburg during the last session of the Leg- ure, it is no wonder that many of us are with a feeling of pride; and, gentlemen, ay it conscientiously, that much of that elopment is due to the influence of the k Association.

he question is often asked, what is the ct of a movement of this kind? While it rue that some of us at times might wonder t its objects are, it is only because we do properly apply those objects as we should. t of all it bears upon its banner "Home de." For it is home trade that brings gress to the merchant; it is municipal im- vement that uplifts the merchant and the munity. It is fair trading between mer- nt and customer that uplifts. When these ciples are lived up to, then the merchant n honored citizen and respected citizen and community an object of admiration from who come in contact with it.

hese are three interests necessary to the elopment of a community. There is the ufacturer, the newspaper and the retail chant, and of them all the retail merchant he king. For it is he who stands in direct tact with the community. It is upon his uence that the community prospers and ; that which it has a right to under the d principles of civilization and the Con- tion of the United States. The work of retail merchant in the past has been ex- led probably too largely upon the effects er than upon the cause. We have been ing considerable attention to such things ch we call grievances, many of which we e created and fostered and nurtured until have become too heavy for us, and then cry out against them. Mr. McCuen has properly referred to the sentiment of Golden Rule in connection with com- tors. Let us broaden out, let us work n broader lines, let us get the absolute fidence of the people, and with that must e the success of the merchant, and the essful merchant is the merchant in an nization. I could dwell for a long time n the work of the past year along the linc organization. Personally I was more en- d in legislative work. The work at Harris- g was at least partly successful, as it left marks upon the road as to make it easier travel in the near future. Unfortunately, a hard fight upon the garnishment bill, Governor saw fit to veto it. What he is g to do with the grafter after be has told hat when the laboring man or any man has able to do it, he is entitled to it, I am ble to say. We are told as retail mer- nts that we are foolish to trust the labor- man, and if you extended your credit to you did him an injury. Those are the inents that you are to bear in mind in future. To do that man good, do not t him.

am strongly of the opinion that the trend he times is of a paternal nature, of taking of the people at large. Therefore, it is to the retail merchants' associations to curry r favor with the consumer. Trade openly honestly and to the best advantage of y man. We know that many tricks that e been practiced in the past have not only detrimental to the merchant who wanted leal on the square, but has been unfair to consumer. The people are beginning to k what they are getting for their money, when they do that they will seek the mer- nt who knows what he is giving them. Mr. ley said there were two halves to a dollar. half is to know how to get it; the other is to know how to spend it.

ne important feature in connection with our nization is the Mutual Fire Insurance Com- y. It has been in existence for a few rs, and while from the standpoint of fire rance it may seem to be a small enter- e, it is growing and upon a good plan. en we consider that up to this time we e saved our policyholders nearly $39,000, y three times the amount of the per capita this Association collected within its exist- c, and saving annually for its policyholders y five times as much as the per capita tax the entire State Association, you can realize t a saving this would be to the members of Association to have every member hold a ll policy in this company. I am going to to you gentlemen that the experimental e of this company is over. We are upon a nd basis.. We are going to do the insur- e business that you require in your business ost, and you may have the benefits of it.

n conclusion, I beg to again thank the gen- nen of York for their invitation to hold this vention in their beautiful, enterprising city. sonally I am glad to have had an oppor- ity to come here. I presume it is necessary me to apologize at this time for having linced at least two invitations to come here, ough it was unavoidable. If you have any- ng on your minds that you want to bring before the convention, let us know it. This ociation is not for the purpose of going into r native town or locality and correcting scs there, but you will find in various parts this room experts upon the very subject n which you wish information. They will lly give it to you, and help you apply such remedies as are necessary at home. I will ask you to attend the sessions promptly; time is short to go through the programme of the size which we have, and it will be necessary to expedite matters to the greatest extent. Come promptly, speak quickly, and get, above all, that which you have come for, and take it home with you. Don't write to the Secretary when you get home for something you forgot. Get it. It is here for you. (Applause.)

PRESENTATION OF GAVEL TO PRESIDENT KAISER.

MR. McCLELLAN: Mr. President, before you call the convention to order I would like to address you personally. "When in the course of human events"—no, I am not going to recite to you the immortal Decloration of Independence, although the words of my opening sentence happened to sound Jeffersonian, but I do wish to make a Declaration of Friendship to you, the honorable President of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, in behalf of the Merchants' Association of York, Pa. As I started to say, when in the course of human life, responsibilities are shouldered by man, they are of different kinds. Some are burdensome and a weariness to mind and body; others are light and a pleasure to carry. The task given to me is of the latter class, and it gives me great pleasure to undertake it.

Your convention is meeting in a city whose foundations were laid early in the eighteenth century. Many incidents of Revolutionary days are connected with its history. When your own city of Penn could no longer protect the Continental Congress, York received the patriots and for nine months protected them from the redcoats. Before many of the towns and cities here represented were thought of, York was laying its foundation sure. But it is not of her history that we are here to talk or boast.

It has been customary through all ages for the one in authority to have as a symbol of office some instrument by which his power may be shown and exercised in commanding respect and attention. In organizations of this kind order is preserved and actions ratified by a block-headed dummy, commonly called a gavel. As to the origin of this little mallet, which, in the hands of a presiding officer, can call attention, produce order, decide momentous questions, history is silent. We do not think that the members of this convention will be so boisterous that you will require very hard use of the gavel. We might have inscribed on it,

"This is a gavel
To stop the babble
Of the rabble."

It has given us greater pleasure to engrave,

"Presented to Albert Kaiser, Pres., Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, by the Merchants' Association of York, Pa.
August 20, 21, 22, 1907."

Our wish is to present the chairman with a gavel which he can retain as a souvenir of his office, not only, but to which are attached several points of historical interest pertaining to the convention city.

This gavel is made of three pieces of wood. The head is of two pieces of oak. The one part is taken from one of the oldest buildings in York and represents a firm, members of our Association, who have been in continued existence through four generations for ninety-eight years. This is the firm widely known through all these years as P. A. & S. Small, hardware, groceries, flour and feed. This firm supplied ammunition to the York troops in the War of 1812, as well as to the first defenders in 1860. Many of York's prosperous men received their business education in this store, and in its office were organized many of the corporations doing business in the county. The other piece of oak is procured from another very old landmark, built about 1765, and known as the Gallagher corner. It is now occupied as a drug store by Heiges & Hildebrand, who have the distinction of being the latest addition to our membership. This house was occupied by Gen. Anthony Wayne in 1771, who marched from that building to join Lafayette and who was present at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown.

The handle looks like cherry, and was taken from an ancient building, recently demolished to make room for the enlarged Colonial Hotel, and which was known as the McGrath property. On October 2, 1777, while the Continental Congress was in session in York, Sam Adams, John Adams, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, and other distinguished patriots lodged in this house. If Samuel Adams had not made a speech in this building favoring a continuance of the war with England, we might still be subjects of the British Government. During this remarkable speech, Samuel Adams' hand may have rested on this very piece of wood, soon to be placed in the hands of our President. Tradition tells us that the little boy who could not tell a lie was presented by his father with the switch from the famous cherry tree, after using it on him. This he preserved as a cane, and on one of his trips through York he left it at the McGrath Inn, and we were fortunate enough to secure it as the handle for this gavel. I say this is only tradition, and we have the advantage over George —we could tell a lie, but wouldn't.

You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that we have endeavored to combine in this threefold way some of York's history, her present-day business and the Association's oldest and youngest business firms. We trust that each rap of this gavel which emphasizes the decision of some subject discussed in the convention may be for the good and welfare of the merchants

A Good Old Recipe

Our Spiced Poultry Seasoning is made from an old recipe which we have never been able to improve on and which certainly nobody else has.

It is a blend of all those spicy and savory garden herbs that, used with poultry, so delights the palate.

There is a quality about Stickney & Poor's Spiced Seasoning which other prepared seasonings, good as some of them are, entirely lack.

Isn't there a safe feeling in dealing with a house 92 years old?

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you —we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

in this State. And, Mr. President, as you look at it in the future, may you recall with pleasure the 1907 convention, and believe that the York Association shall always cherish for you the warmest regards. As you have heard from the introductory speakers why we are proud of our city, its boundaries, and its history, we trust, as you associate with its people, and see evidences of its progressiveness, you may conclude that there is a great future for threefold York,—the City Prosperous, the City Beautiful, the City Hospitable.

In the name of the Merchants' Association of York, I present this emblem of authority to you.

In accepting this gavel President Kaiser said:

Mr. Chairman and merchants of the York Association: I am at a loss to reply to the very sentimental and kind words of yours in presenting this gavel to the President of the Retail Merchants' Association. I assure you personally that I will appreciate it, and I am quite sure that the merchants of this state will appreciate the honor you have done their officer. I cannot but thank you for your kind offer, and assure you that I will treasure it forever to come. When I first saw it I was afraid that probably you had taken the few remarks I had made in reference to York as a little bit of knocking. I fully appreciate the sentiment of love expressed in this gift, and thank you heartily for it.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SOCIAL FEATURES.

MR. McCLELLAN: It is my pleasure to make a few announcements in regard to the social features of this gathering. The committee has endeavored to provide a series of entertainment which will not tire you, but which we trust will be pleasing. This evening you will meet at The Colonial and promptly at 6.30 will take trolley for a trip about the city and wind up at our Country Club, where a light luncheon will be served, a band concert given and something else.

On Wednesday evening you will be provided with free transportation to and from Highland Park, and a ticket to the show. At 6.30 we will show you a parade of the finest Fire Department in the country.

If any of the delegates or members of the local association do not have these tickets please come to Mr. Geesey or myself, or to the association rooms.

On Thursday, at 1.30 sharp, there will be an excursion to the York Haven Power Plant, where electricity is generated by water and transmitted to York for some of its power and light.

It is hoped that all delegates and ladies with them and all members of the local association will take part in these functions.

I would like to call your attention to some souvenirs of this convention, so that each delegate secures one. You have already received the "Book of York" and set of picture postals. They are presented to you by the local association. You will receive later something "sweet," with the compliments of the American Caramel Company, one of whose plants is in our city. The York Silk Manufacturing Company, with its largest plants in York, has presented you with a beautiful souvenir representing their famous "Money Back" Silk. This is gotten up in a unique style and will be given at the Country Club to-night.

The Monoline Company, of York, of which our Mr. C. A. Geesey is head, will furnish a neat sample of that balm for all aches and burns. This you can use if any one feels sore at the treatment he has received. (Laughter.)

The committee desires that every person gets one of each of these offerings of York's industries.

We wanted to give you an ice machine and a steel bridge, and a bundle of wall paper, and a delivery wagon, and a set of furniture, but as most of you came with dress suit cases only, thought you might not know how to get them home. If there is any old thing you would like to have, just pick it out from the list of goods manufactured in our city, and we will see that you get their business address.

PRESIDENT KAISER: We will now take up the reports of local associations. As these reports are called for, the delegates will respond, read off the statistics on the form that has been provided, and make such comment relative to the work taken up in the past year as they desire to, thereby avoiding repetition of the report of former years.

REPORTS OF LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS.

ALLENTOWN.

Efforts made during past year: To have peddlers license ordinance passed; a closer observance of the Sabbath in the city; to have improved collection laws passed for necessaries of life; to have the national pure food law passed; to elect a paid Secretary; to incorporate for mutual and financial benefits, and to improve the social and financial conditions of our grocers and butchers in Allentown and vicinity; to collect money from delinquent debtors, and to keep cut-rate stores out of Allentown.

ALTOONA.

Efforts made in the past year: Increase of membership; establishment of credit rating system, municipal legislation, the framing and introduction of garnishee bill, and its support through last Legislature; opposition to schemes of collecting agencies (so called) who rob our people by grace of some of our Secretaries who recommend them, and other work which space prohibits mentioning.

BERWICK.

Efforts made in past year: Had association incorporated; moved in new quarters and made membership general; had meeting with Board of Trade to reduce indebtedness; had meeting with Town Council to force completion of trolley; held special meetings before members were allowed to contribute towards Berwick Hospital and enlargement of the Y. M. C. A., permission being granted by unanimous vote.

BRADFORD.

Efforts made in past year: Regulation of soliciting for fairs, entertainments, suppers, dances, advertising and all forms of donation which merchants are constantly being requested to make. The publication of a complete credit directory, and the establishment of credit rating system; the regulation of credits and soliciting has made our organization one of value and influence in the community, resulting in increased cash sales and a marked falling off in applications for credit; the suppression of soliciting alone has saved most of our members the cost of their dues many times over. Through our collection department we have been able to secure the settlement of many outstanding accounts due our members, aggregating between $3,000 and $4,000. Many of these accounts had long since been charged off to profit and loss. In the collection of delinquent accounts we have been greatly aided by the co-operation of the employing interests of the city. During the last session of the Legislature we gave the State Association officers in their fight for legislation in behalf of the mercantile interests our best support both financial and otherwise. Our association is in a flourishing condition, and our members are well satisfied with the good that has been accomplished during the past year. We have had no ills with which we have not been able to cope.

MR. McCUEN (Oil City): I would like to ask how you rate your dues for membership, how do you get the proportion they should pay, and also what constitutes an honorary membership?

MR. DOBIE: Members retiring from business are put on the honorary membership list. The dues are regulated according to the volume of business done by the member.

MR. McCUEN: Do the members do that themselves?

MR. DOBIE: No; the Executive Committee does it.

BRADFORD.

Efforts made past year: For a time after the formation of the Business Men's Association quite a number of our members lost interest in the organization, but lately we have taken on a new lease of life and shall continue in our efforts for the betterment of our interests as grocers. All of our members are affiliated with the Business Men's Association, which we were instrumental in organizing. A very friendly feeling exists among our members, and in consequence trade conditions generally are better to-day than they have ever been before.

BUTLER (Grocers).

Efforts made past year: Co-operative buying to amount of over $100,000 during year; the association collection agency did good work.

BUTLER (Business Men).

Efforts made past year: Collections have been fairly good; turned down twenty-three advertising schemes successfully; furnished reliable information to all of our membership; endorsed the pure food, 2-cent mileage and No. 480 Irwin Garnishment bill. Cleaned our streets; have the promise of the P. R. R. Co. to pave the approach to their freight depot, and answered all communications from affiliated associations as promptly as possible.

CANONSBURG.

Efforts made past year: To suppress peddling, etc., without paying a license and borough tax; to have Council enforce borough ordinances; to protect the merchants against delinquents; to aid in general the State Association to have enacted better laws and protection; to assist in the welfare of our members and those asking for information otherwise; to aid in the interests of our city in general and to condemn that which is unreasonable and unjust against our citizens.

CARBONDALE.

Efforts made past year: To establish a crematory; legislation in Councils and State Legislature; special effort to get people to buy at home; we abolished all ticket-buying and fake advertising; to make all peddlers take out a license; better telephone service. Gentlemen, the Carbondale Business Men's Association has grown rapidly during the past year. The Secretary has within $35,000 worth of insurance, most of it since the last convention. We worked hard with the State officers during the last session of the Legislature, and sent many telegrams to our representatives in both bodies, and stand ready to repeat the performance when the time arrives. We are observing Wednesday half-holidays for three months. Held our first banquet in January, and it was the most successful ever held in the city. We gave an entertainment to the store clerks, with good speakers, followed by a dance. We are endeavoring to have a garbage plant erected; also have asked Councils to buy a certain piece of ground for use of farmers when they come to the city.

CARNEGIE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION.

Efforts made past year: Discouraged ticket and program evil; started 6 o'clock closing among grocers and butchers; tried to close other lines, but failed.

COLUMBIA.

Efforts made in past year: Endorsing garnishee bill and other legislative matters that were of much benefit to the merchants of the State, and we used our utmost efforts to influence our representatives to assist the passing of bills that were to our interest. Advertising schemers enter our borough weekly, and leave the place within an hour, Columbia being entirely free of trading stamps and advertising schemes of all characters.

CONNELLSVILLE.

We have worked up a co-operative purchasing business of $1,500 per month.

DU BOIS.

Efforts made in past year: 822 collections, 102 paid in full, 57 accounts partly paid or held over for adjustment; held our annual banquet January 31; put a veto on a franchise for a third telephone company; secured State aid in making six miles of macadamized road.

ERIE BUSINESS MEN'S EXCHANGE.

Efforts made in past year: We paid all expenses of the last convention from our natural resources without accepting donations, or printing an official programme, or holding a picnic or excursion. Our annual banquet in January was a social success and a financial failure. We are educating our members not to extend credit without security, or to persons with unsatisfactory records; not to carry balances forward, and not to extend credit longer than thirty days. Use of credit guide, collecting letters and exemption waivers is increasing. Our attendance at meetings is improving. Our soliciting committees are educating the membership not to patronize advertising mediums, or institutions soliciting aid which have not been investigated and approved by committee. We gave active support to the State legislative campaign; two of our members were members of the House of Representatives. Local efforts to raise the hucksters' license fees failed. Erie members have carried 644 policies in the Retailers' Mutual, and saved $5,685.04. Our employment bureau has increased our membership, is adding to the population of the city and increasing the wage distribution. We have inaugurated the system of electing officers and delegates by mail ballot. Any member may nominate for any office by mail, telephone or at meeting. After nominations are closed secret postal card ballot is taken, resulting in a larger vote and more representative choice. We contemplate a referendum vote on the question of holding an "Old Home Week" at Erie in 1908. We have condemned plans for inaugurating trade excursions and refunding fares to non-resident customers. We have protested to our hotels against non-resident firms retailing by sample from hotel sample rooms. We have organized the Erie Secretaries' Association, the Grocers' Credit Exchange, Real Estate Exchange of Erie, Erie Lumber Dealers' Association and Erie Furniture Dealers' Association, and other branches are contemplated.

Our Committee on Municipal Affairs reviews all pending city ordinances, questioned candidates for Mayor and Councils and put them publicly on record for abolishment of railroad crossings; has urged international arbitration and restriction of armament by concurrent international action; has successfully promoted a new pleasure boat for Erie Bay with a capacity of 150 passengers; is agitating for better street railway service and extension of our conduit system, and has secured a State appropriation of $100,000 for improvement of our public dock. We are in favor of ward division, abatement of the smoke nuisance, extension of trade schools, and have encouraged the Friday half-holiday movement this summer, and will work for a Saturday half-holiday next year.

FRANKFORD.

The above are the main points have to report, and, compared with previ years, shows the most prosperous and prog sive year in our history.

The association is trying to eliminate kinds of fake advertising, and by a ref on the part of the members to buy tickets advertise in programs, several hundred dol have been saved to the members. Held annual outing in connection with the B ness Men's Exchange of Oil City, and, bining with Oil City, settled a street car st last fall.

We also co-operate with Board of Trade in all matters pertaining the advancement of the first third-class of the Commonwealth, and also with the cers' Association in any way that we can a them, and we consider the successful def of the forty-seven suits brought against retailers by the Pure Food law in such a as not to cost any of the defendants one a masterstroke of co-operative association w

PITTSBURG.
(Grocers.)

Efforts made past year were directed towards putting the Association on a paying basis.

PITTSTON.

Efforts last year: Collections and legislation, free bridges and good roads. Amount of insurance, $105,400, a saving to the members of $964.73. Our president and secretary and Mr. A. B. Davenport organized an Association at Wyalusing, including the towns within a radius of ten miles.

POTTSVILLE.

Efforts past year: Increase membership and special effort to collect apparently hopeless bills, resulting in nearly $1,000 being collected in little more than a year. Old Home Week, which originated with the Association, was a grand success.

SAYRE.

Efforts made during the past year were directed towards better trade conditions, having succeeded in locating a shirt factory, and local and State legislative work.

SCRANTON.

Efforts made past year: Since January 1st we have doubled our membership; started a co-operative buying circle; assisted in State legislation, also locally; increased fire insurance from about $30,000 to $90,000; held annual outing in July, being the most successful held by our Association; still annoyed somewhat by trading stamp evil, but as an association we pay no attention to it, leaving it entirely in the hands of our members to conduct their business as they see fit.

SHAMOKIN.

The charter of this organization, which grants the feature of a board of trade, enables it to invite the location of industries in Shamokin, the Association having secured exoneration from taxation for a period of years for such industries. Success so far has been beyond expectation. During the last session of the Legislature the Association secured the repealing of the act regulating a mercantile tax of $1.50. This places the county on a level with all other counties, the Act of 1867 being a special act for this county. Also secured the passage of an act appropriating $30,000 for the establishment of a State Hospital, to be located at Shamokin. This community is rid of all trade abuses, and has the finest fire protection in Pennsylvania.

SHARON.

Efforts made in past year were in the direction of State and county legislation, having secured the repeal of an ordinance permitting peddling in Mercer County, and saved money to members by refusing to sanction advertising schemes.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM.

Efforts made past year: Enforcement of Sunday closing; building houses to accommodate increasing population; worked against Larkin and similar schemes; towards new bridge and railroad station, and the dropping of the name "alley."

STEELTON.

Efforts made past year: Legislation; had also been buying on the co-operative plan until May 15, 1907, when this department was sold out to the Steelton Wholesale Grocery and Supply Co., which is doing strictly a wholesale business and canvassing all stores for trade.

SUNBURY.

One of the primary object for which this Association was organized was to abate the peddling nuisance, in which it has been successful. The case against the Citizens' Supply Co., of Columbus, which we won in all the Pennsylvania courts, we lost in the United States Supreme Court, but understand the company has discontinued canvassing our town. This Association joined in securing the repeal of the Mercantile Tax Law and assisted in State legislative work.

TAMAQUA.

Efforts made past year: To educate our people to trade at home; to increase membership by having a banquet, at which we had all merchants in town attend and gave them talks on organization by some of our State officers; by holding a picnic, at which nearly every person in town was present; have driven out trade abuses.

TOWER CITY.

Efforts past year: Revision of rating system and legislative work.

WATERFORD.

Efforts last year: Have made Merchants' Grove an ideal spot for picnics, the famous Hunt mineral water constantly flowing through the grove, free to all; are now cleaning and fixing inlet of lake.

WAYNESBORO.

Efforts made past year: To aid passage of laws; to file delinquent list; check unworthy credit; prevent fake advertising and gift schemes.

WICONISCO AND LYKENS.

Efforts made last year: General association work; legislation; abolition of trading stamps, etc.

WILLIAMSPORT.

Performs the functions of a Board of Trade, and has a guarantee fund of $400,000, ready to take any industry in the city after a thorough examination into its merits; have located a steel plant and two or three other industries now under construction; are coping with all the local evils; has a Board of Directors, numbering 12, which performs nearly all the duties.

YORK.

Efforts made in past year: Advancement of municipal affairs and correction of trade abuses in general.

This concluding the reports of local Associations, the question box was opened, with the following result:—

QUESTION BOX.

Questions were read by Secretary Howes as follows:—

"Was the reason given by our Governor for vetoing the Garnishee Bill sufficient logic for his action?"

(Cries of "No.")

Senator Drury: What was the reason?

Secretary Howes: The reasons given were that it had always been the policy of the State to protect the wage-earner from attachment upon his earnings, although we have a garnishee law on the statutes for the protection of hotel keepers and boarding house keepers, which permits the attachment of debtors' wages to the extent of four weeks' board. The Governor stated that it was difficult to determine what were necessaries, although courts in eight or ten States have a well defined line of reasoning on that question. He criticised the amendment made to the bill, not at our request, but by one of the members of the Legislature, providing that the bill should not be good for claims in excess of $25. He alleged that that limitation would be an inducement to run large bills. We took the stand that it would be an inducement to the merchant not to extend bills for over $25 where he could not garnishee. The fourth reason was that the laborer should be protected in his earnings.

On motion of Senator Drury this matter was deferred until new business was reached.

Question: "Woud it not be beneficial to assist in organization work to have quarterly or semi-annual county or tri-county meetings, inviting merchants from towns not organized to such meetings, and invite some of the State officers?"

Mr. C. A. Stuart (Carbondale) thought this an excellent idea, as it would promote organization work.

President Kaiser stated that a resolution to this effect was passed at the last convention recommending just such a plan.

The convention at this point on motion, adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

THIRD SESSION.

Wednesday Morning, August 21, 1907.

President Kaiser called the convention to order at 9.20.

Secretary Howes read the minutes of the previous day, which were approved as read.

Mr. Smedley: I move that the report be accepted and spread upon the minutes.

Seconded and carried.

President Kaiser: Organizer's report, Mr. J. W. Rittenhouse.

REPORT OF ORGANIZER.

Mr. Rittenhouse: I would like to state that fortunately or unfortunately, I don't know which, the firm thought I did well enough at home to get my salary, and I have done very little traveling. The last that was done was Lancaster, which I took in on November 3d; September 1st, St. Mary's was brought in by Mr. Howes; September 29th, Butler (Howes); November 9th, Jeanette (Spangler); December 12, Waynesboro (Howes); December 17, Coraopolis (Spangler); December 20th, Punxsutawney, by Mr. Howes, I think; January 25th, Skinner's Eddy was organized by Mr. Evans and Mr. Giles, and afterwards brought into the State Association by Mr. Howes; January 29th, New Kensington, by Mr. Spangler, I think January 30th, Huntingdon (Mr. Howes); February 23d, Allegheny (by Mr. Spangler); March 18th, Verona and Oakmont; May 7th, Brownville, Mr. Spangler; April 9th, Ambridge, by Mr. Stuart; June 3d, Jermyn and Mayfield; June 7th, Carnegie (Spangler); July 29th, Rochester (Mr. Howes.) I would like to state that the reason organization work in Eastern Pennsylvania has not been pushed more is due to the fact that unless a man has business going over that territory, and travels in the interests of something else, very little work can be done. I regret to state that I have not done very much during the past year, my deputies having done better than I have.

President Kaiser: Gentlemen, you have heard the report of the Organizer; what is your pleasure?

On motion, the report was received and filed.

Mr. McClellan at this point again called the attention of the convention to the programme provided for the entertainment, after which President Kaiser introduced the next speaker as follows:—

President Kaiser: It affords me great pleasure to introduce to you a gentleman who has kindly consented to address us. He is an expert in his line, and comes as the representative of a man whom we might call more than an expert merchant. I now introduce to you Mr. Joseph H. Appel, advertising manager for John Wanamaker's establishment, and I am sure that Mr. Appel will not only be entertaining, but exceedingly instructive.

Address, "The Master Merchant," by Mr. Joseph H. Appel, Advertising Manager for John Wanamaker, Philadelphia:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: I would like to say that when the invitation to address you was given to Mr. Wanamaker he was extremely anxious to come, but foresaw that he would be in Europe at this time, and it would be impossible to be here. However, he has commissioned me to hring his greetings to you, and wish you well in all your undertakings.

We used to begin with the universe and reason down to man. Now we begin with man—with the child—and work out our universal problems from within out. The great secrets of merchandising are to be found within the breast and experience of every tradesman—no matter how humble. A large store has no monopoly of business wisdom. Its wider experience comes merely from the composite experience of the group of merchants that manage it. Each manager of an individual stock in a large store must be a merchant himself. And so each merchant must cut his own path to Mastership.

"Know thyself," is the starting point.

"Control thyself," is the next step.

"Develop thyself," is the finality.

Science.

First the Science of the Exchange.

Here three great laws apply to the merchant:—

1. The law of Supply and Demand.
2. The law of Compensation.
3. The law of Diminishing Returns.

The law of supply and demand applies to the stocks—their kind, quantity and variety.

The law of compensation applies to the character of the store, the general service, the method of dealing, and to the employees.

The law of diminishing returns applies to the expense of doing the business.

Of course, to a very large extent the value of merchandising depends upon its cost of production, but the law of supply and demand must also be reckoned with.

"Prices are determined not by the competition of the sellers only, but also of the buyers—by demand as well as supply," says John Stewart Mill.

By the supply of goods is not meant the general supply in the world at large, but the supply on sale in that particular community. As a general rule, prices rise with the lessening of the supply and the increasing of the demand, and fall with the increasing of the supply and the lessening of the demand, but not always in strict proportions. Prices on necessities are affected first, prices on luxuries last.

When losing money the merchant must think of this law of supply and demand and make this test:—

1. Have I the goods the people want?
2. Have I them in sufficient quantities?
3. Have I too much of any one thing and not enough of another?
4. Am I selling my goods as cheap as other merchants?
5. Am I giving good service?

When losing trade the same questions might be asked, with this addition: Have I the confidence of the people?

The law of compensation may be plainly stated in this way: "That we give a full equivalent for what we receive, and receive a full equivalent for what we give."

The Law of Diminishing Returns, simply stated, is this:—

That after a certain point is reached, with added capital and added labor, the proportionate returns of profit will diminish. That is to say, if one person cultivates ten acres of land and makes $100 a year profit out of it, the addition of another laborer would yield less than $100 profit to each of them. In other words, it means that you can push a thing to a certain limit and reap great reward, but beyond that, reward diminishes. This applies in business directly to the expense of operation. You may push your business and increase it, but if the expense of doing this is too great, your net profits will decrease. You may have too large a store, you may pay too much rent, you may have too large a stock, you may do too much advertising, you may have a too expensive delivery. All these are the expenses of a store, and if too large cause your profits to diminish.

"Net," some one has said, "is the smallest and biggest word in business." Gross profits mean nothing; net profits mean everything. Gross sales are a snare. It is only net sales that count. Get down to net in everything you do. Be practical. Don't live in the cloud. Keep your two feet planted squarely on the earth.

The Patent Office at Washington is crowded with inventions, theoretically perfect, but practically of no use. They don't pay. An electrical inventor can make a storage battery that works, but no one has produced one that pays. It is useless to invent a machine to do something that can be done quicker by hand. It is useless to invent a substitute that is more expensive than the machine it is intended to displace. It is useless to produce business at such a cost that it does not pay. Advertising is good only when it pays a net profit on the cost. A system is good only when it pays a net profit on the cost of installation and operation. Business is good only when it pays.

VI.

Science.

The Science of Human Endeavor applied to business. Sheldon, in his "Scientific Salesmanship," gives a formulary for success that may well apply to retail business, because it is a formulation of the principles of ethics and psychology which apply to right living—and right living begets good business. The formulary is this:—

Endurance + Ability + Reliability + Action = Success.

This formulary is better understood when we go back to the virgin source of these characteristics.

What is back of Endurance? The Body.
What is back of Ability? The Intellect.
What is back of Action? The Will.
What is back of Character?

Why, the Body, the Intellect and the Will—all three.

But what is still further back of all these—back even of character? Why, you, you, you. Not somebody else. But you. The Ego. Call it a Soul, call it a part of the Divine, call it what you will, YOU are back of everything you possess.

Now, what do we actually possess? Only three things:—

1. A Human Body.
2. An Intellect.
3. A Will.

When we use the phrase "We possess," we presuppose the "We," showing that there is something back of the body, back of the mind, back of the will.

Develop that something.
Develop your own personality.
Develop your own individuality.
Develop responsibility.
Develop yourself.

This leads to Self-Reliance, which is the test of a man's value in any walk of life. Each of us, the strongest as well as the weakest, is responsible to something—to human laws, to the laws of business, or to Nature. There is supervision and discipline in Nature. When we are sick we are "brought up" with a sharp twinge of pain. There is supervision in Human Nature. The child when bad is "brought up" with a switching. There is supervision in business. The merchant when he violates the laws of Nature or business is "brought up" sharply by a loss of some kind, either money, of customers, of friendship or of reputation.

The more responsible we make ourselves, the less some one else will have to be responsible for us. And the greater our own value will become.

Please do not think I am preaching when I give you this doctrine. Sweep away religion, sweep away the churches, sweep away all human laws, and you have remaining Morality as a scientific thing.

Morality is a scientific thing.

There is in Nature a constructive principle—which takes matter and builds it up into trees, into animals, into man, into business. To live in harmony with this principle brings not only bodily health and peace of mind, but the living of such a life is Scientific Morality. It is a business asset.

The opposite force in Nature is the destructive principle which is constantly tearing down. This is Scientific Immorality. In business it creates liabilities.

Now, the business man who conducts his business in line with the principles that build up himself, that build up society, that build up the community, that build up the State, that help to educate and civilize the people, is working in harmony with the constructive principles of Nature and Business, and building up his own character and his own business.

When something goes wrong in your store, take account of stock. Take account of your own stock—your physical stock, your mental stock, your stock of will-power. You will very soon learn to perceive whether it is your body that is not serving you properly, whether it is your mind, or whether it is your will. You will learn also that while your mind, by absorbing information, becomes the great fund of knowledge, that you cannot use that knowledge without physical strength and will-power. Your mind and your body may be said to be a double team of horses that you are driving. The will-power is both the reins and the whip—the reasoning and the directing power and the spur at the same time. To draw out from each of us the best that is in us should be our endeavor. And when we examine ourselves analytically we are surprised to find the latent qualities we possess. The small man is never so small as he seems, just as the great man is never so great as he seems.

VIII.

As stock in trade we first possess a Physical Body.

This gives us:—

1. Health.
2. Energy.
3. Endurance.

The right care of the body is the first duty of every merchant. Do you know there are 28,000 miles of nerves in every human form? Do you know that the eye has 8,000 different mechanical contrivances? It opens and closes its front shutters over 30,000 times a day.

We are only beginning to realize the important part that health and energy and endurance play in success.

Don't be a slave to your business; be its master.

Don't enslave your employees.
Lead in early closing.
Insist on vacation with pay.

Take systematic exercise and see that your employees take it.

If the establishment is large enough have daily setting up exercises. The National Cash Register Co. give up an hour every day for systematic exercise of their employees.

The boys and the girls in the Wanamaker stores have their daily drills.

The man of energy is the man who moves, and who moves the world. The old deacon used to say: "I'd rather see a kettle boil over than not boil at all."

But energy is not enough. We must have endurance. We must be a thorough express. We must work hard while we are at it. Spurts are good, but the energy and dash of Sheridan would not have ended the war without the endurance of Grant. One heat a day is best. It is the starting and stopping of a train that wastes energy.

Sooner or later stores will open at ten o'clock and close at 4, with no intermission.

Leave business cares at the office. Throw them off with your office coat. Armour said he never thought of business once he was out of the office.

Don't pull the long face at home just because you have had a hard day at the office. Your wife has probably had a harder day. And the very fact that you had a hard day means that you must recuperate, renew your energy and vigor for the following day.

The greatest recreation and health-builder is change of occupation.

James Madison used to build desks and chairs to rest his mind.

Gladstone used to go out and cut down trees.

On the other hand, as a relief from physical labor, reading or talking is rest.

Rest does not mean going to sleep all over, but merely putting to sleep those faculties or parts of the body that are tired.

Self-control is the great physician. Keep one's self in control physically and mentally and the human machine will keep running at its maximum.

Self-control must come before personal effort.

The horse or automobile must be under control before it can properly do its work.

Even the smallest store can afford a rest room for any of its employees who may be taken ill. It can have a faithful and effective outlook to the kind of drinking water supplied. It can have clean toilet apartments, soap and water, towel, brush and comb. It can have proper light and ventilation. Keeping one's clerks working in a damp or cold atmosphere is bad business, to say the least. Proper storm door, proper heating, proper lighting, proper ventilation, will all help to sell your goods and help the people who sell them.

"You must be a good animal," says Herbert Spencer, "before you can be a good man."

IX.

And now let us take stock of the Human Intellect.

"With what do you mix your paints?" a great painter was once asked. "With brains," he replied.

Only the big man can manage big things.

We are not all born equal, but we are all born with an intellect that may develop to a greater extent than perhaps any of us realize.

Throught the intellect come:—

1. Knowledge.
2. Wisdom.
3. Intuition.
4. Inspiration.

Instinct and inspiration come from within, but they must be developed from without. And Edison says inspiration is nothing more than perspiration.

From experience comes the only actual knowledge we have.

Knowledge and wisdom come best through our own experience.

In taking stock of the things we know, it is important to keep in mind this classification of data:—

1. Things we know and know we know.

For instance: That we exist—that flowers bloom and birds sing—things we know ourselves, from our physical senses.

2. Things we assume we know, but do not know that we know them.

For instance: That the earth is round; the law of gravity.

3. Things we believe, but do not know nor assume to know them.

For instance: That there is a God.

4. Things we neither know nor assume to know, nor even believe.

For instance: Where space or time begins or ends. Number of fishes in the water, of birds in the air.

Personal experience is the great teacher.

Observe.

A foreigner once took a drive along the Wissahickon Creek in Philadelphia, and he got out of the carriage perhaps fifty times to examine a rock or a flower or a tree. He saw a hundred things along that road where the average person would see but one.

There is a child's game in which a person is sent into a room filled with articles to stay there for five minutes. Then he is asked to write just down what he saw.

It is a good game for grown-ups, for you will be surprised how few things you really observe upon the first attempt, and how many things you will see after you cultivate the habit of observation.

Observe intelligently. To do this you must read and study.

"Get the study habit," says our friend Hubbard.

Have a box in your stores for ideas.

Exchange ideas with other business men. Exchange ideas with any man. A great lawyer when he was working out an important case would stop and discuss the points of that case with every man he could buttonhole, and he said he got an idea from almost every one.

Make it a habit to converse at least once a day with some one your superior. Your superior stands on higher ground and gets a better perspective of things.

Perspective is the great thing in observing.

Take the back seat in a trolley car and ride down a straight street in any one of our large cities. Centre your eye on some tall building. As you go farther away from it, it looms higher and higher. This building at the corner that seems high when you are in front of it dwindles as you go on and on, and the huge structure further away seems to climb higher into the sky.

Don't keep your eyes and nose to the grindstone. Get away from your business occasionally and get the proper perspective.

Write down your thoughts as they come. Keep a pad and a pencil always ready for ideas. Lincoln used to stop at the end of each furrow he plowed he wrote a sentence on the fence rail.. His Gettysburg speech is a model of short, vigorous sentences. We know a thing only after we tell it to some one else or write it down.

Don't secrete your knowledge. Pay it out to any one who asks—and you will receive double wisdom in return. Travel if you can. If you cannot travel, organize an Idea Club with storekeepers in other cities, or non-competing firms in your own city. You may have a general secretary, and when some detail of the business bothers you, write to him, and all the other firms will send their system. They send it not only to you, but to all the other merchants. In this way you all exchange ideas. You all benefit. It is a sort of Round Robin School of Business.

Keep your ears close to the ground and observe what the people want. Get close to your customers. Have your clerks report to you what they say, what they ask for, what their desires are. Study their wants. Then supply them.

John Jacob Astor was once forced to take over a millinery business for a debt. He went out and sat down in Central Park, studying the bonnets of the women as they passed by. Then he went back into the shop and ordered the same styles. You may be sure his business prospered.

To give an article value in exchange it must

1. Have use.
2. Be difficult to secure.

Air has use, but no value in exchange, because not difficult to secure. An ice manufacturing machine might be very difficult to procure in Labrador, but it would have no use there and consequently have no value in exchange.

The public must have an appetite for goods before it will buy them.

Now, in retailing you must first have goods that people want—that they have appetite for.

You must, secondly, get the people to attention to those goods.

You must, thirdly, get their interest.

You must, fourthly, arouse a desire for goods.

You must create a demand.

Four simple rules for advertising are the

1. Get attention.
2. Arouse interest.
3. Get believed.
4. Arouse desire and action, which ends a sale.

It often requires great courage to r the price on goods. There comes a ti business when certain goods must be re in price. Enthusiasm is necessary to sell good

Henry Clay, in the Senate, grew so siastic in what he was saying that he become oblivious of everybody and ever but his subject, leave his place on the and by gradual steps come down to the of the Vice-President, where he would appealing to him as if no other perso present. Such enthusiasm in the adve and selling of goods has built the great of the country.

Prudence, in a way, is the opposite thusiasm. The master merchant will nev so enthusiastic over a certain kind of that he cannot bring prudence into pl prevent large over-buying. Already in England co-operative stores have ade great headway. There are great prob- ns to solve, but some day there will come store in which the employees and the cus- mers will have a direct interest in the busi- ness, along with the employer and merchant. There will be dividends for all.

It was Peter Cooper's boast that he never made money at other people's expense. He would not invest in anything that was not a profit to others connected with it.

In the lives of great merchants, if you study them well, may be found the precepts for business success.

George Williams, the eminent London merchant, gives this formulary:—

"Energy and enterprise, directed by prudence, caution and wisdom; determination to get on, combined with ability to look forward; the fixed principle of dealing conscientiously and in a straightforward way with all customers, and a kind and generous treatment of employees."

And Benjamin Franklin, in his autobiography, sums up his success as follows:—

"To temperance I ascribe my long-continued health, and what is still left to me of a good constitution; to industry and frugality, the early easiness of my circumstances and acquisition of my fortune, with all that knowledge that enabled me to be a useful citizen, and obtained for me some degree of reputation among the learned; to sincerity and justice, the confidence of my country, and the honorable employ it conferred upon me; and to the joint influence of the whole mass of the virtues, even in the imperfect state I was able to acquire them, all that evenness of temper and that cheerfulness in conversation which is still sought for and agreeable even to my younger acquaintenances."

Franklin had that evenness of temper, that serenity of mind, that equanimity which is the badge of the master.

Equanimity. Some one has said it is the greatest word in the English language. An even mind. An even temper. Calmness, firmness. All are wrapped up in equanimity.

"When selfishness has given way to generosity," says Clarke, "and perfect love has cast out fear—then all this shows itself in that equipoise of soul which we call good temper or equanimity."

Selfishness is the root of all sin. We are all brothers and we must live for each other. We are all part of the Divine and we must some day all reunite in the Divine.

Anger is actual heat, scientists now tell us. It burns up our energy. Two to one in all things against the angry man.

Hate is actual cold. It shrivels up the soul —it shrivels up YOU.

Equanimity—the control of one's self.

Co-operation—the working together for the good of all.

Mutuality—the reciprocity which involves self-sacrifce on both sides.

These form a trinity without which no business can long endure.

The way to get the most happiness in storekeeping is to serve all as well as you can. You will serve yourself better for serving others. Work for the good of all and you work for yourself. Work for yourself alone and you shrivel up and die.

Work is for the worker.

Success in business is not the financial reward; not the piling up of great fortunes; not the rearing of great buildings.

The test of all success is this: What sort of man are you making out of yourself?

The test of a business man is: Are you doing all you can to become the Master Merchant?

Let one thing more be emphasized: It is what we think and what we do that makes us what we are. Reflection, meditation, action.

Hang on the walls of your mind the chart of business and of right living. Meditate upon it.

Benjamin Franklin was accustomed to go every evening into a quiet corner and review his labors of the day. He would think of the things he failed to do, and of the things he did wrong.

James Allen, in his beautiful essay, "As a Man Thinketh," says: "A man is literally what he thinks, his character being the complete sum of all his thoughts. * * * * Let a man radically alter his thoughts and he will be astonished at the rapid transformation it will effect in the material conditions of his life. Men imagine that thought can be kept secret, but it cannot; it rapidly crystallizes into habit, and habit solidifies into circumstances. * * * Man is buffeted by circumstances so long as he believes himself to be the creature of outside conditions, but when he realizes that he is a creative power and that he may command the hidden soil and seeds of his being out of which circumstances grow, he then becomes the rightful master of himself."

Fix in your thoughts what you must do to become the Master Merchant, then bend all your energies in that direction.

"The Vision that you glorify in your mind, the Ideal that you enthrone in your heart—this you will build your life by, this you will become."

[Loud applause.]

President Kaiser: Mr. Appel, I believe it is needless for me to express for the delegates assembled here, representing various retail merchants throughout this State, their appreciation of your instructive and very learned address. Personally, I express my thanks and appreciation, and know that in that sentiment is enthusiastically expressed the thought entertained by each member present here this morning.

Mr. H. J. Rich (Pottsville): I move that a rising vote of thanks be tendered to Mr. Appel for his address.

Seconded, and all arose.

President Kaiser: I do not know how our Food Commissioner feels at having so many grocers in a court house. [Laughter.] I am positive, however, from my short acquaintance with our Commissioner, Mr. Foust, that his desire is not to meet the grocer in a court house, but to place him in the position where he will get a square deal, and help him build up that sentiment for fair dealing with the consumer, so ably expressed by the preceding speaker, Mr. Appel. I now introduce to you Mr. James Foust, Food Commissioner of the State of Pennsylvania.

"The Food Laws of Pennsylvania," by James Foust, Food Commissioner:—

Mr. President and Members of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania: I have no doubt that many of you feel, to some extent, about how I hesitate to get up here this morning after what we have listened to. I did not know I was coming to York to make any kind of an address; I was merely invited to attend the meeting and mingle with the different members of this Association, but I assure you that it is with great pleasure that I am here and I shall not take up but a few minutes of your time. I will touch only on a few features of the new food laws. I want to congratulate this Association, more especially for the able manner in which your representative looked after all the legislation which we heard mentioned this morning. I mean Mr. Crow. He was there early and late, buttonholing in the Senate, then in the House, and while we were apart on some things, we were together in some others. I was opposed to the present law and your representative was for it. I believe that every retail merchant here who deals in groceries, if he were to take about a month or two and go off into the woods and try and study all the provisions of this new law, and attempt to carry out all of them, he would not be able to put into his business what we heard suggested by Mr. Appel. But we have the law and we must make the best of it. First, the Food Commissioner shall require notice to be served where goods are found to be adulterated. Then if a retail merchant has purchased goods under guarantee, he requires an invoice guarantee, which is necessary, because the goods must be identified, and very often the retail merchant will purchase the same brand of goods from two or three different wholesalers, or jobbers, or he may purchase direct from the manufacturer. Consequently, it is necessary to have this invoice to know where the food, if adulterated, comes from, and to know who to proceed against. If the invoice guarantee is from a manufacturer, jobber or wholesaler outside the State, then the facts are certified to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and there it practically ends, as far as we are concerned, as well as the retail merchant, for the reason that we do not purchase our goods as the Department of Agriculture of the United States does. They must purchase three samples. They leave one with the merchant, send one to the chemist and one to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, but under the food law of Pennsylvania we purchase two samples. One is sealed and sent to the chemist, properly labeled, so that it can be identified, and the other is sealed and sent to the office properly labeled, which is kept under a lock and key. Should the man whom suit is brought against be dissatisfied with the analysis he can go into court on petition and ask the court to have the sample produced which is in the hands of the Food Commissioner, and send it to a chemist to be designated by the said court. In this way there is undoubtedly a square deal guaranteed not only the retailer, the wholesaler and jobber, but the manufacturer as well. But I desire to say that this law means trouble. It means trouble to the wholesaler and to the retailer. Where prosecution is desired, the retailer must appear as a witness, where the wholesaler or jobber sells the goods to the retailer, and lay around the court house waiting for the case to come up. All prosecutions, of course, are brought against the wholesaler, jobber or manufacturer issuing the guarantee. That was not the desire of the ones having in charge this new law. Their purpose was to have the case traced back to the one who actually manufactured the goods, but you can see how that would be unjust. The retailer would produce a guarantee that he purchased the goods from some wholesaler in Philadelphia; the agent would go to Philadelphia and he would produce a guarantee that he purchased the goods from some large jobber; he would go there and he would produce a guarantee that he purchased the goods from a syndicate of jobbers, and that would mean an endless chain, with practically no reults. So it was deemed best to hold the one responsible who sold the goods to the retailer, let it be a firm of wholesalers, jobbers or even manufacturers, if the goods are sold direct by the manufacturer. Then if any prosecution is instituted we must go, of course, to the man issuing the guarantee. The kind of a law that we need and ought to have in this State is one something like this: Where goods are found to be adulterated, notify the retail merchant, give him an account of the analysis, give him the name of the chemist and notify him to discontinue the sale. What would be the result? He would ship his goods to the man he purchased them from, and they would be shipped back to the firm who made them and the right party is reached and there is no prosecution. At the same time this would make the work much more pleasant, not only for the trade, but the Department as well. I do not believe there is a retail merchant in Philadelphia that wants to sell adulterated goods; I do not believe they do it knowingly. I will venture to say one-half of these goods are misrepresented under the new law. For instance, many jobbers have a foreign name on their line of goods, more especially spices and such things, unless the name of the manufacturer who prepared them appears on the label. They should be labeled "Manufactured by," whoever it is. I think also the branding feature should be a National regulation and not taken up by the States, because if goods are manufactured bearing a label in Pennsylvania, they are always sold in other States and goods manufactured in other States are shipped here and naturally come under a National law. So the question of label or branding should be entirely a National regulation in order to save trouble to the trade, as well as to the Department.

I desire to say that the first case we instituted under the new law was in Media, Delaware County, and there will be some few others in Philadelphia in the near future, and we will have to get some judicial construction of the many features pertaining to this new law.

We need some legislation in reference to soft drinks. We had such a law at the last Legislature, but it was defeated the last night of the Legislature. Soft drinks are sold by some manufacturers in this State simply with water as a basis, with various artificial coloring and saccharine sweetness. Consequently it is a complete concoction to go into the stomachs of little children, as well as grown people. We need drastic legislation to break up this evil. We also need a law to prevent watering and skimming of milk. We do not have a law in reference to that, except what is known as the new food law, imposing a penalty of $60 which, with costs, will run up to about $100, and consequently puts the dairyman out of business and brings distress upon his family. I think a penalty of $25, or some small penalty should be imposed that will not in any way cripple a man or affect his peace and the happiness of his home.

In reference to the law regulating the sale of oleomargarine, there are over a hundred licensed places in Allegheny County allowed to sell oleomargarine uncolored for butter, but they buy colored oleomargarine and sell it for butter. We have a great deal of trouble in detecting the different vendors of oleomargarine, for the reason that a stranger comes in and they get butter; an agent goes in connected with the Department and he gets pure butter, consequently we have now and then to take an agent, dress him up in mill clothes, with a towel around his neck and a dinner pail in his hand, and possibly an old pipe in his mouth, dirty face, and he gets colored oleomargarine, and, of course, prosecution follows. They are on the lookout and at times tip off one another. It is a difficult task to adopt methods whereby we can run down the various violations of the oleomargarine law. At another time we will have a lady go around and make purchases with a basket, and we find that quite successful. I say the retail merchant ought not be hounded and run down by the agents, and the Dairy and Food Department of the great State of Pennsylvania and of the United States owes to the business men in this country a square deal and fair treatment. [Applause.]

If the Government of the United States would send a commission to Germany and have them study this question and learn the method, and come over and hold up the hands of Dr. Wiley, this whole problem would be settled once for all.

A Delegate: Why go to Germany?

Mr. Foust: Because tey have an excellent system and do not allow any adulteration. They dump it all out, confiscate it, and do not allow any food manufactured or sold in the country that in any way contains any adulteration or preservatives of any kind.

If every retail merchant in Pennsylvania was as careful in the purchasing of their goods as the Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia is, the problem would be solved. [Applause.] If any house attempts to sell goods to its Association they lay down the rules adopted by the Dairy and Food Commission, under Section 3 of the law, when the president of the Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia and its secretary were present. It is astonishing, after the rules were adopted, what letters I received from the trade everywhere, ice cream people especially, regarding thickeners, stiffeners and gelatine. I never thought that chemicals, powders and all these things were used in the manufacture of ice cream until I promulgated this rule. Then inquiries came in from all parts of the State; in fact, it became so voluminous, that my usual answer was that the contents of their letters would be taken up and the matter considered. Of course, it has not been taken up yet.

There are a great many things about the new law that will give the retail merchant considerable trouble, and also the jobber and wholesaler and will give the Department more or less trouble, but that is what we are paid for, and we are perfectly willing to do it. If we have the hearty co-operation of the retailer it will help to solve the question. If they will take the time to write for a copy of the rules, and when any one comes in to sell goods say, "Will your goods comply with the rules and law," and simply demand an invoice guarantee, there will be no prosecutions against any one, and that will make the work easy, and make the work, as far as the Department is concerned, largely experimental. We print a bulletin each month which is sent out free, about 5,000 copies go out monthly, and it gives the analysis of everything analyzed and the name of the firm manufacturing or preparing it, and a complete history of the work done each month. In that way the trade can be fully informed as to what is pure and what is impure.

I would like to say that at the next Legislature I confess it is my intention and desire, if possible, to obtain the assistance and co-operation of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, as well as the jobbers and wholesalers, to try and prepare a law that will adjust the trouble without any prosecutions against the representative business men. [Applause.] I do not think prosecutions should be brought against the merchant. I do not think he should be made a criminal, because we all know he is not; neither do I think prosecutions should be brought against the wholesaler. All that we need is a simple law that any merchant can sit down and read in twenty minutes and easily understand it, and one which the courts will have no trouble in interpretating. It can be done by, when goods are found to be adulterated, sending notice to the retailer, notifying him to discontinue the sale, and let him then return the goods to the person he purchased them from, who in turn can return them to the one that sold them to him, or, possibly, the manufacturer. That will end prosecution, and if a retail merchant will insist on selling the goods after being notified, then of course prosecution will be instituted against him. That will solve the question and save prosecutions being brought against the jobber and wholesaler, and save the retailer attending court to identify the goods, and trace the goods to the parties who issued the guarantee. That is the problem that many people have worked years to solve. It is hard to tell just what is right. During the four years that Dr. Warren acted as Food Commissioner, the State of Pennsylvania collected in fines from the retailer something like $300,000 or $370,000. In many cases the retail merchant was reimbursed by the one who sold or manufactured the goods. But how about his business reputation? Was that returned to him? This is the important feature of the business. The merchant should have proper protection along this line. I think the new law should eliminate entirely the labeling of goods, because goods are shipped into the State not manufactured and that should be a National regulation.

I want to say in conclusion to the Retail Merchants' Association to-day, that if any one of you should be connected directly or indirectly with the Dairy and Food Department while I am Commisioner with anything like graft or holding-up kindly notify me by wire, at my expense, and I will come to your city and consult with a lawyer, to be chosen by you, and we will prosecute the party that attempts any blackmail or holding-up. [Loud applause.] I want to say that I promise here to-day that whatever is done in this office during my term will be done honestly and fairly, and I will promise you a fair and square deal. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Kessler (Erie): A good many business men are interested in knowing how the new bill affects goods that we had on hand before the law became operative? Can we sell them?

Mr. Foust: The Legislature passed this law; they are responsible for it and not me, so that when it received the approval of the Governor on the first day of June it became a law. I might just say this. I believe a housewife cleans house twice a year. The retail merchant should clean house a few times a year, and consequently the safe way is to get rid of old stock and start in with new.

Mr. E. O'Brien (New Castle): Suppose a number of gentlemen went together and purchased a car of goods and distributed them among fifteen or twenty merchants and there was but one invoice bearing the guarantee, what would be the consequences if the goods were found adulterated, and found on a party who did not have an invoice?

Mr. Foust: If there is no sale and merely a going together of a number of retail merchants and purchasing a carload of goods, and the carload is all on one invoice, the one issuing the guarantee would be held responsible under the law. The invoice would cover the goods of all the rest in addition to the one holding it.

Mr. William Smedley (Philadelphia): I want to move on behalf of this convention a vote of thanks to Mr. Foust, not only for his address this morning, but for his disposition to give the retail merchants in this State what they have not always had, but what they are going to get in the future, A SQUARE DEAL. It was my pleasure to become acquainted with Mr. Foust shortly after his appointment as Dairy and Food Commissioner. We always believed in going to the front, and we found Mr. Foust not only willing, but more than willing to take us into his confidence, and I think I voice the sentiment of all the merchants who have come in contact with the newly organized Department in saying that I think we can feel the Department is not hunting for prosecutions, but is organized for the correction of trade abuses and for the elimination of food adulteration. We know that Mr. Foust is our friend, and I want to see a rising vote of thanks, giving to him our confidence and asking him to give us his.

Mr. Crow (Harrisburg): I would like to second that motion and corroborate every statement that Mr. Smedley made. In addition to that I would like to corroborate the statement that Mr. Foust made in connection with our co-operation during the Legislature last winter. I want to say this: Mr. Foust stated in some instances we were agreed and in some instances we did not agree. Mr. Foust was opposed to the pure food law as framed, but promised me and our merchants that he would not do anything against the law. I want to say Mr. Foust kept his word to the very letter. He was honorable in every respect, and I guarantee that what he promied you to-day, knowing him as I do, he will keep to the letter. [Applause.]

The motion was here carried by a unanimous rising vote.

President Kaiser: We will now have the report of the Financial Secretary.

QUESTION BOX.

be question box was again opened at point, Secretary Howes reading the ques- s as follows:—

"Would it not be better for the mer- chant, the wage-earner and the public in general if we had Monday pay?"

"Don't you think our State Association should send a request to Governor Stuart to punish the Capitol grafters to the full extent of the law?"

resident Kaiser: I feel satisfied that the ernor is perfectly able to cope with that stion without any further suggestions.

pon motion this question was laid upon the e.

"Is it necessary for soap clubs to pay $10 license? If so, how can we get after them?"

resident Kaiser: In the opinion of the ir it is not a legal requirement. We eve in going after them in a proper man- You might compel them to pay a mer- ile tax. In many counties they might be nable to the peddling tax. It is a local stion and that one will have to be settled your own local Association.

"Should our State have a law to pre- vent the giving of secret rebates by cor- porations, etc., giving the State the same power that the Sherman law gives the United States?"

r. Fisher (Philadelphia): In the city of ladelphia we have quite a number of what call chain stores, controlled by one or or three men. One man has 160 odd es. Some time ago the Standard Oil Co. serving these stores, and some inde- dent refineries were serving the stores oil. A committee from the chain stores ed on these independent refineries, stating tbey were entitled to a commission, which know means a rebate, because they were dlers of a great quantity of oil. The inde- dent men said they could not conscien- sly do that. They told me after that ting they were told they need not supply stores with oil. That also holds good in rence to the National Biscuit Co. These n stores sell goods at a price below what one-line stores can buy them at. I think question is an important one and at the t session of the Legislature there ought e some work done in reference to it. We not fear honest competition, but compe- n which we call dishonest no one can com- with.

"Must food products be dated by the retailer to agree with the invoice, or would a number, corresponding on goods and invoice, satisfy the requirements of the Food Department?"

r. Foust: Each invoice should bear the e, and all invoices are dated to identify particular time the offense was committed, :h was tne time the goods were marked. y should be kept separate from any other ds of the same brand so that the mer- nt can know which invoice they belong to.

"Why should the retail merchant pay a tax on his sales and the railroads be ex- empt from a tax on their sales?"

n motion of Mr. Smedley this question referred to the attorney of the Asso- ion.

"How can we prevent wholesalers from selling to consumers?" [Laughter.]

resident Kaiser: I do not know which ld be the best method to proceed against l action, but an effective one has been to perate in your purchases and go in and pete; usually any move in that direction cause the jobbers to abandon the con- ers' field.

r. Howe (Freedom): I move that where ember of a local association learns that obber is selling a consumer, that such ce be forwarded to the Secretary, to be n up by the officers of the Association. conded and carried.

"Have any Associations received a re- bate from the railroad companies in con- nection with tickets for outings?"

r. Wagner states that they have always ived such rebate.

r. Rittenhouse states that the D. & H. C. R. R. of N. J. have been giving such ites right along all summer.

r. Monroe stated their plan was to buy the ets outright and sell them.

r. Andrews said that the Interstate Com- ce Commission would not allow a rebate. tickets could be secured from the railroad panies at a certain price and sold at a ler price.

r. Detzel stated that in Erie they were ad- d by the railroad company upon applying a reduced rate for a picnic to New Castle, as controlled by the Interstate Commerce mission, which required at least thirty forty days' notice.

Mr. O'Brien (New Castle) stated in connection with their excursion to Erie, the committee in charge purchased 200 tickets from the railroad and sold them at a small profit; that the railroad company had nothing to do with selling the tickets.

"Is the use of preservative in catsup, etc., contrary to the food law now in force?"

Mr. Foust stated this was an open question with the Department which was waiting for a ruling on the matter.

"In what way, and how, can we best meet the competition of canvassers and solicitors who make a house-to-house can- vass, coming to our city from Buffalo and Erie? Our present laws do not seem to cover same. Carroll, of Union City."

Secretary Howes: Each borough or city seems to take the right to pass very stringent license laws requiring them to pay quite a heavy tax.

President Kaiser: I would suggest they adopt the York policy—"Keep your eye on York." Have your home firmly imbued in the citizens and solicitors from outside will soon find their visits very barren of results.

"To what extent are there any law pre- venting peddlers, fakirs, etc., entering any borough or city of this State to peddle and sell on the streets from house to house by wagon or otherwise?" Cadonsburg."

Secretary Howes: The gentleman had better get a copy of the "Peddlers' Digest."

"Should it be wise to advise our Asso- ciations to send as delegates, when pos- sible, their president and secretary?"

"Should resolutions of thanks be given our friends in the State Senate and House of Representatives for the splendid aid rendered us in legislative measures at last session?"

Secretary Howes: I believe we have already expresed our thanks in a letter to the gentle- men who voted for our measures.

"Do wholesale houses sell to your cus- tomers?"

Mr. Clover (Scranton) stated that at Scran- ton wholesalers sold to some extent to con- sumers, especially restaurants, boarding houses, etc. Decided efforts to stop it had not been successful.

Mr. Calderwood (East End, Pittsburg) stated that was the case in his locality.

Mr. Stevenson (Greensburg) stated that by taking a decided stand together the retail gro- cers of Greensburg gave the wholesalers to understand they would have the retail trade to deal with entirely and consequently Greens- burg has not been annoyed in that direction since.

Mr. Fisher (Philadelphia) cited the advan- tages of co-operative buying in this connec- tion. "In Philadelphia," he said, "it places our members in a position where they can sell to the boarding house and hotel on a basis below the wholesaler."

Mr. Kane (Allegheny) stated that he knew it to be a fact, after eighteen years' experience in selling canned goods for a large concern in the West, that they will sell an order to a consumer in large lots.

Mr. Stuart (Carbondale) stated they had a great deal of trouble in this direction in con- nection with flour and feed.

Mr. Detzel (Erie) stated they had some trouble in Erie, but it would only be a short time when the jobbers would not have any- body to sell to but the retailers.

"Does the association which never sends delegates to the State convention accomplish much at home?"

[Cries of "No."]

"Is not the grocery interest sufficiently large to warrant devoting at future ses- sions of the convention one session solely for discussion of grocery topics?"

Secretary Howes: I think there should be.

Mr. Willert (Erie): We are dabbling in these questions every few minutes, and I deem it wise to have one session purposely for them.

"Does the Huntingdon Association per- mit soliciting by telephone?"

Mr. Brumbaugh (Huntingdon): I think they do.

"Why not attempt to have the oleo- margarine tax law repealed, so as to get creamery butter cheaper and allow the poor man's butter to be sold cheaper?"

Mr. Kane: I think it would be wise to have a committee of three appointed to draft reso- lutions to present to the next session of the Legislature.

President Kaiser: It is rather early to start this matter. There is a diversity of opinion on the oleomargarine question. I do not think in the Eastern part of the State you would get much strong support on that line. I think a question of this kind, affecting so many interests, should be thoroughly studied and intelligently discussed and acted upon when we come to the next convention.

"If not, why not, go to New Castle in 1908?"

"Can any local Association report that credit conditions have improved during the past year?"

Various delegates reported conditions had improved in their localities.

"Is it constitutional to buy tickets for church suppers?" [Laughter.]

Secretary Howes: At Erie we have no ob- jections to the members buying tickets for suppers, but we prefer to have them buy them at the entrance. We try to discourage solicit- ing.

"Has the Council of a borough the right to legally enact an ordinance to license peddlers, fakirs, etc., and be legal?"

"What dues ought a merchants' associa- tion to provide?"

Mr. Kreindson (Bradford): We pay the high- est dues in Pennsylvania—$30 per year.

Mr. Templeton (Butler): Some members in Butler pay $48 a year.

Secretary Howes: I think one of the princi- pal reasons why many of our Associations are not represented is because they do not have adequate dues. I had a report sent to me by one secretary who said the annual dues of his Association were 25 cents per year. I believe the dues ought to be heavy enough to employ a secretary to do the work, provide all dele- gates they are entitled to at the State con- vention and support legislation and other work. As to what the dues are depends on the number of members they have.

"Why is a paid secretary advisable?"

Mr. Templeton (Butler): We concluded to pay a secretary $900 a year and give him col- lections. We have a Board of Governors of six, meeting twice a week, and the Associa- tion is going along and being very successful.

Mr. Brown (Altoona): We tried the experi- ment of having a secretary who was employed by a paper, giving his spare time to our work, paying him $25 a month. Since the last con- vention I have had the honor to do the work, giving it my entire time, and I have increased the membership 75 since our last report.

"Under what legal rights should outside foreign concerns (of other States) have in placing a large number of agents in our State to solicit orders for groceries and so forth, and be free and exempt from taxes and licenses; is it fair play and just? Should not there be a level plan, the same uniform license and tax in every State? Why should the Interstate Commerce pro- tect one State and not another on an equal and level plan. Is it fair? Under what procedure could we induce the Interstate Commerce Commission to equalize the li- cense and tax on outside concerns, as well as the home merchants of this State?

"What are the advantages of incorpo- ration?"

"Should an Association incorporate?"

Secretary Howes: Without incorporation, under the law an Association is a partner- ship, and each member is individually liable for its bills or for its acts. Incorporation relieves the individual merchant of that re- sponsibility, and it is advisable to be incor- porated.

The convention at this point adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M.

FOURTH SESSION.

Wednesday afternoon, August 21, 1907, the convention reassembled at 2.20 P. M., President Kaiser in the chair.

President Kaiser: One of the pleasures that I have is to now introduce to you one of the most popular attorneys of York, John A. Hoober, Esq., who will deliver an address, the topic of which is "The State Association and the Federal Bankrupt Act."

Mr. Hoober at this point addressed the convention on problems which have vexed merchants of many States, at the conclu- sion of which President Kaiser, on behalf of the convention, thanked Mr. Hoober for his kindness in addressing the convention.

President Kaiser: We seem to be very fortunate during this convention in having gathered with us men who are experts in their line, coming so closely in conformity with the direction in which we are work- ing. It is with great pleasure that I in- troduce to you at this time Mr. J. Frank Dechant, of the Sheldon's School for Scien- tific Salesmanship.

President Kaiser: I now have another honor, in presenting to you Mr. E. S. Thomas, of the National Cash Register Co., Dayton, who will address us on the subject of "The Proper Care of Labor," also on "Window Dressing."

Mr. Thomas here gave a most interesting talk on the history of the development of the National Cash Register Co., illustrating his remarks by the use of the stereopticon and motion pictures.

President Kaiser: We will now have something pertaining a little more to our own organization. Mr. C. A. Stuart, of Carbondale, will address us upon "The Secretary's Office as a Clearing House."

MR. STUART'S ADDRESS.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the con- vention. This gathering of business men and its importance is enough in itself to lend inspiration to a speaker, especially if he is more than unusually interested in his subject. I can conceive of no gathering of men of more importance than the re- tail merchant, that class of men who supply to the people of the commonwealth the necessities and luxuries of life, and the ob- stacles which they encounter in plying their trade.

I represent a city of about 150 first-class merchants, who supply the needs of about 20,000 persons. There are probably 4,000 to 4,500 heads of families. Of this num- ber there are many whose wages are small and inadequate to meet the needs of their families. There are many who are not hon- est, and who figure to purchase a certain amount of goods, never expecting to pay for them, which means to them an increase in wages. This is one of the evils the re- tailer must face and from which he should be protected. The necessity for organiza- tion is obvious. I can stand on the corner of where our two busiest streets cross, and in the one block in each direction I can count over forty members of the Carbondale Association. The office of the association is in a building on one of these corners. There is a fair percentage of these forty members within one block of the office who use the office, but there are too many who do not. The association does not tell any man how to run his business, but its function is to aid him by advice when asked for, and by advice volunteered when in the judgment of the secretary it becomes necessary. One day as I was walking along the street the thought came to me, if the members used the association as they should, what a great saving, and what a large amount of the worries of business would be averted. Here is one man who is making it his business to look after the best interests of his mem- bers, some of whom demand much.

Now, I must come to the clearing house of my subject. First, let me say that the secretary's office is a merchants' clearing house, and in many ways is similar to those conducted by banking organizations. But one of the great differences is that a bank- ing clearing house is always in a large city. The smallest hamlet may have a clearing house of its merchants.

The chief feature of a clearing house is collections. This is an age of collecting. People have the collection craze, from cigar bands to bric-a-brac, but the most valuable one to the merchant is a collection of the names of the beats. This is a problem for the secretary. In the association which I represent the secretary has printed sheets of paper, headed "C. B. M. A. Collection Department. Rating List." These are dis- tributed at intervals, the merchant making his rating and small books printed. This plan has proved very satisfactory. Mr. Merchant, do not be backward in telling your brother merchant of these dishonest persons whom you have been supporting. It is not right that you should support other men's wives and families. Do to your brother merchant as you would that he should do unto you. The clearing house is something more than a collection agency. The gradual development of a given or- ganization should always go beyond the original idea of its promoters. This was true in regard to the Clearing House in New York. In its conception its purpose was only to reach an adjustment and pay daily balances due to and from each other at one time, in one place, each day, but it soon began to expand, and to-day it has become a medium for united action among the banks in ways that did not exist even in the imagination of those who were in- strumental in its conception. In the asso- ciation the merchants should be so united that in times of strikes and such troubles, and settle questions peculiar to themselves on very short notice, and with the least amount of effort. The clearing house idea of rendering financial assistance to its members in times of panic is a future pos- sibility of this association.

There is one thing I frequently hear. If the merchants will hang together we can do something. They ought to hang together if they do not. I have no patience with the merchant who agrees to do a certain thing and when the time comes backs out.

Two or three years ago I was working in York and I met Mr. Geesey. I then learned a little bit about association work, and the first opportunity that came along I got into the work, which I enjoy very much.

President Kaiser: Mr. Stuart is to be congratulated for his masterly effort the first time to address our convention.

We have the good fortune to have our convention brightened by the presence of the secretary of the National Association of Retail Grocers, and I will take the liberty to encroach upon your time and introduce to you Mr. John A. Green. Anything more I would say would spoil the introduction.

ADDRESS OF JOHN A. GREENE.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Con- vention:

It is with much satisfaction that we look on the accomplishments of the past year. The efforts put forth by some of the Missouri leg- islators to repeal their Garnishment law met with defeat through the influence of the mer- chants of the State of Missouri. The same influences were at work in the Ohio Legisla- ture, and met with the same fate in Iowa, California and Nebraska.

The passing of the Wife's Liability bill by the New York Legislature, only to be vetoed by Governor Hughes, was another accomplish- ment that the Merchants' Association might well be proud of, and last of all, your own efforts in behalf of a Garnishment bill was a great achievement.

You have indeed cause to be congratulated when I tell you that for twelve years the Ohio people worked to get their Garnishment law on the statutes of Ohio, and it takes all of our combined efforts to keep that law intact.

You have reason to be proud of your offi- cers—Crow, Howes, Smedley, and many others, and last, but not least, the little man with the largest heart in the United States, who wields the gavel, Mr. Kaiser. (Applause.)

We should not relax in our efforts to confine distribution of goods of all kinds to the retail trade, and not have it diverted into other channels to be made leaders of.

The evils of illegitimate competition make serious inroads on the retail trade that nothing less than the co-operative spirit, a strong, steady pull all along the line of protection of the legitimate rights of retail merchants will ever eliminate.

Catalogue usurpation, with a persistent te- nacity to adopt the passage of the Parcels Post bill, the semi-jobbers and avaricious manufac- turers who persist in selling the consumer as well as the retailer, the unloyal debtor and the lack of legislation for compelling him to pay for his purchases, all combine to unsettle the conditions for doing a legitimate retail business on a basis of accumulative profits and success of the merchant.

It is possible for us, by working up broader principles and along generous and helpful lines, to break down prejudice and build up friend- ship without abating one whit our efforts to secure business and make profit.

For years the retailer has had practically nothing to say in regard to how he should conduct his affairs, the consumer dictating entirely his methods, never considering the cost.

Things are gradually being changed. The merchant, through his organization, has begun to realize that he and not the consumer should manage his affairs. New methods are being installed, certain hours for delivery, certain days for collecting, and numerous other improvements have been brought about, all through the co-operation and exchanging of ideas of the merchants of the different sections of the Association.

It is but a short time since it was almost considered a crime to ask a man to pay his account, and more so to inquire into his credit.

The benefits of extending credit are limited. The retail merchant, wishing to help along his honest customer, is often led into extending an unlimited amount of credit.

In the rush to increase sales, how easily we forget the practical lessons that are daily brought to our notice.

Every retailer who has had an extended experience has been told by hard-up debtors that it would have been better for them, both in reputation and pocketbook, if the merchant had not been so lenient and had insisted upon prompt payment of the obligation when due, and as a last resort the debtor, after taking advantage of the credit extended, makes a break for the District Court and files an application to be released of all indebtedness through bankruptcy.

We have been making a determined effort to amend this law, and if we can amend this law to the effect that we, as retailers, shall not be subject to any one taking advantage of it, then so let it be, for it is not our purpose to interfere with affairs other than our own, but we have repeatedly said that unless this bill be amended that we shall have a bill introduced which will repeal the law in its entirety.

Such a bill was introduced at the last session of Congress by one of the Texas representatives, and will be brought up for consideration at the next session.

We seek to have the bill amended to the extent that no one can take advantage of it unless they owe more than $500. This will protect the retailer.

Much has been said in regard to the Parcels Post bill.

In a letter recently received from Chas. William Burrows, vice-president of the National Board of Trade, is the following interesting matter bearing on Parcels Post:

"But first I call your attention to another industry that has waned. Twenty-five years ago there were, it is estimated, 3,000 live booksellers in the country carrying good stocks of books representing the various classes of literature, history, science, biography, travel, poetry and fiction. To-day there are estimated to be only 1,000 of the same class, and they are steadily withdrawn from business, though in the meantime the population of the country has increased by 50 per cent.

"By the passage of the Parcels Post bill now before Congress the mail order houses and many manufacturers of advertised small wares would unquestionably benefit materially, and on this account it is that we run across so many specious articles explaining the benefits of following the German and English parcels post service.

"As the development would inevitably give a serious blow to many of the small merchants in all lines, a blow so crushing as would certainly force many of them out of business, merchants' associations in different sections have energetically protested against these schemes, and will continue to bring upon our national lawmakers pressure to defeat legislation whose enactment would permit a few mail order houses in the large cities to control the retail business of the entire country.

"The expense of distributing merchandise sold by these people being paid in a large part by indirect public taxation."

A large company in the Middle West is now issuing a little monthly magazine, and places it in every shipment of their goods that goes to the consumer, in which it says:

"If we had a parcels post law this package (with which the magazine is enclosed) would have cost you much less than by express." At the close of one of the articles in the magazine are the following words: "Then let us see to it that a Congress is elected that is pledged first to give this country a general parcels post, the best and cheapest and most extended in the world; second, to establish a parcels post that should do all the general transport business on rates something like the following: Parcels up to one pound, one cent; one pound to eleven pounds (a peck), five cents; eleven pounds to thirty pounds (half bushel), ten cents; thirty pounds to sixty pounds (bushel), fifteen cents; sixty pounds to one hundred pounds (half barrel), twenty cents; one hundred pounds to two hundred pounds (barrel), twenty-five cents."

This is something like the Henry bill, which calls for packages in weight up to two hundred pounds, dimension to the size of a barrel, and not to exceed six feet in length.

There seems to be but one object in view, and that is the defeat of the express companies, forgetting that the entire retail interests of the United States are placed in the greatest jeopardy, forgetting or do not realize that the enormous amount of money drained from the community in which the members of the Grange live is so much of the life and wealth of that community put into the large trade centres and the coffers of the mail order houses.

It has always been a mystery to me why this great body of intelligent men and women should not see the iniquity of this measure.

What are the retail merchants doing to counteract this tremendous influence? Not as much, possibly, as we wish them to do, but there is in existence an organization known as the Affiliated Presidents and Secretaries of Retail Associations who have been doing some vigorous work.

Two years ago the National Board of Trade were very largely in favor of a parcels post measure, but through educational influences and energetic work, assisted by the organization of which I speak, last year they voted as opposed to the parcels post bill.

This was a great gain, for the National Board of Trade is composed of influential business men, but we must not lose sight of the fact that while the business interests have been aroused to a very great extent in opposition to this bill, there is at the disposal of the promoters of this measure a very great influence.

I have never hesitated to say that this bill is the most uncalled for bill that was ever presented to Congress, and if those who are the promoters of this bill say that they depend on the help of the President of the United States, it is for you and I, as business men of the country, to say that we depend on the assistance of the President, and demand of Congress that any bill detrimental to the retail interests of the United States should be buried in oblivion. The business men should control the situation, for it is they on whom the entire credit of the country depends. Hence, I say again, that the necessity for organization was never more apparent if it were only to defeat this one measure.

Our Association is formed to look after all retail interests through one association.

The manufacturers are all united in one association. The farmers are all united in one association. Labor is organized in one association. The retail merchant is indispensable in every community. He is the medium or guardman who stands between the manufacturer and consumer, and our interests must be protected through our own Association. No one will look after our interests unless we do it ourselves. In the past we have not been class-conscious. We have allowed those who know nothing of our circumstances to make our laws.

As retail merchants we occupy more business premises, carry more stock on our shelves, are more largely assessed, pay the largest share of taxation, pay more insurance, more wages, contribute more largely toward government revenue, employ more clerks, contribute more to charity, and have a larger voting power than all the other commercial bodies combined.

If the retail merchants are destroyed the cities and towns will be destroyed. Then why should we not stand shoulder to shoulder in guarding and protecting our commercial welfare? No great or far-reaching work can be carried on without a strong and vigorous centre. We must have a pivot from which to work, and these centres are our State and National officers, who are elected at the annual conventions by all the members. The majority of retail merchants are too busy to know what is transpiring around them, and even if they did, without an organization they would be helpless. Individual merchants by themselves are mere units, but united they command respect. It would cost one member a very large amount to do what now can be done by many at a very small cost for each.

We must all work and act together and present the same views to our legislators after they have been wisely considered, and this can be done only by consultation and united action through one association.

What we need is co-operation, for it is the only system that will insure success in any organized body. By its application to the regular attendance at all meetings, by carrying out the recommendations of the majority, by following out as closely as possible all the precepts of organization and stick together by acting in unity on all questions.

We seek the co-operation of the manufacturer and jobber. We seek their moral influence, believing that by a co-operation of all interests we shall be able to bring about conditions in the trade that will be a benefit to all concerned.

But while we seek this co-operation from a moral standpoint, let us, from a financial standpoint, be independent of all other influences.

I do not advise an independence of antagonism, but an independence of co-operation, where each manufacturer, jobber and retailer, in his own sphere, can work out the different problems and solve them to the advantage of all.

PRESIDENT KAISER: On behalf of the convention I desire to thank Mr. Green for his splendid address.

PRESIDENT KAISER: The next order of business will be nomination of officers.

NOMINATIONS.

MR. GEESEY (York): I desire to make a nomination for President, and in doing so I want to say that this organization has arrived at the stage where its influence is felt among not only merchants of the State, but among all interests that are concerned. We have had our struggles; we have had our work; we have had to have men give their time to this organization without compensation. Now, that the organization is a success, we need a man to lead us who has had experience: we need a man who has ability. In making this nomination I believe I am nominating that man. I desire to place in nomination for the office of President of this Association Albert Kaiser, of Philadelphia. (Loud applause.)

On motion, nominations closed.

Mr. W. A. Bosserman nominated for First Vice-President Mr. Wilmer Crow, of Harrisburg.

Mr. Kane, of Allegheny, seconded the nomination of Mr. Crow, paying high tribute to the nominee.

Mr. Detzel (Erie), in words of high praise, nominated Mr. S. W. McCuen, of Oil City, for First Vice-President.

Mr. Smith (Franklin) seconded the nomination of Mr. McCuen.

Mr. Rankin (Dairy Station) nominated Mr. E. C. Wagner, of Homestead.

Mr. Murphy (Warren) nominated Mr. I. H. Mott.

Mr. Crow (Harrisburg) nominated Mr. L. J. Schroeder, of Columbia.

On motion, nominations closed.

SECRETARY.

Mr. Smedley (Philadelphia) nominated Mr. A. M. Howes, the present incumbent.

Seconded, and nominations closed.

FINANCIAL SECRETARY.

Mr. Nelson (Chester) nominated Mr. E. J. Morris.

TREASURER.

Mr. O. A. Patterson (Philadelphia) nominated Mr. Wm. H. Nelson, the present incumbent.

On motion, nominations closed.

TWO MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The following were nominated for Executive Committee: Mr. P. M. Malloy, Williamsport; Mr. A. S. Deeter, Reading; Mr. J. F. Howe, and Mr. William Giles, Pittston.

On motion, nominations closed.

NEXT PLACE OF CONVENTION.

MR. O'BRIEN (New Castle): Mr. Chairman and delegates: At the opening session of our convention your Worthy Past President, Mr. Johnston, told us that it is thought York is in the spot where once was the Garden of Eden. Now, this is correct, and a more thorough investigation shows that the western boundary extends to the Ohio line, about twelve miles from New Castle, and the probabilities are that the tree from which Mother Eve obtained the apple grew where York now stands. (Laughter.) The hospitality extended by the merchants of York to you delegates we do not agree to surpass, but we will give you this assurance, that no effort will be too great for the merchants of New Castle, the most up-to-date city of the third class in this Commonwealth. And we believe for the members residing in the western part of the State and for the best interests of this organization our city should be selected as the meeting place for the Twelfth Annual Convention in 1908. In behalf of the New Castle Grocers' Association I extend to you a most hearty invitation to meet with us next year, and let us demonstrate to you that what we claim are facts.

Nomination seconded.

MR. DRURY (Pittston): Gentlemen, since coming to this convention I have been asked to make a nomination for the next meeting place. I come from the coal regions. We have had our labor struggles, and other troubles, but they have left us, and now we want the convention to come our way. We have a small town in the lower part of the coal regions which has been very loyal, and have had a hard struggle to maintain an organization of this kind, and for that reason we are asking the convention to come that way. The place we have in view is Pottsville.

Mr. Stuart (Carbondale) seconded the nomination, as did also Mr. O. A. Patterson (Philadelphia), and J. W. Rittenhouse (Scranton).

After announcement on behalf of the York Entertainment Committee the convention, at 5.25, adjourned until 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

LEGISLATIVE REPORT.

President Kaiser, in speaking of the of the committee at the last session o Legislature, said:

Feeling it will be better to come fro gentleman who had that work practical charge, and who so ably handled it, I leave it to Mr. Crow to make a detaile port. I can say for Mr. Crow that h far more work and offered a much larger fice than any of us ever dared to expe him, and far more than we can ever than or recompense him for. I know that o one hand Mr. Crow has endeared himse every retail merchant of the State of Pe vania who knew anything of the work was going on at that time. I will say I came in touch with a man who was mo tive, more conscientious, and yet more to his cause than was our representati Harrisburg, and at no time was time too able or was work too arduous for him forward and carry out the summons came from your executive officers. Upon occasion that I have had to communicate him, or to meet him in person, I found prepared and posted up to the minute. with extreme pleasure that I offer to hi morning the unhampered floor, to lay b you gentlemen just what the difficulties i work were. Mr. Wilmer Crow, of Harri

MR. CROW'S REPORT.

Mr. President and gentlemen: In the part of January I received a telegram State Secretary Howes, informing me t had been selected by the Executive Com to represent the State Association at H burg during the session of the Legisl After giving the matter careful consider and with some hesitancy, I finally notifie

I would accept the appointment and would e the Association to the best of my ability.
While several bills received the endorsement support of the Association, only one meas-was introduced by it, namely, the Garnibill. The Trading Stamp bill was sup-ed as long as it was in shape to be of e benefit to our members, but finally it so amended in the Senate that it was tically worthless, and with the other work hand, and very little hope of getting it into its original shape owing to the rush dent to the closing hours of the session, was not pushed, and perished by the way-
. The repeal of the mercantile tax law followed up until it developed that to try force it would endanger the Pure Food bill, the Garnishee bill, when it was deemed isable not to try to force it. The political lers had made up their minds not to sup-any measure that would lower the revenue he State on account of their plans to keep or increase the appropriations to the schools charitable institutions. This sentiment strongly expressed by many members of houses, who said if we pressed this measthey would have to be against us on our r measures. The hill to put a mercantile on soap clubs came within six votes of sing the House. From talks with members the House and conversations overheard, I sure that the defeat of this measure was to the fact that the wives and daughters many of them were interested in these clubs, on their account they voted against it.
at credit is due to Representative Garner, Schuylkill county, the author of the bill, for gallant fight to have it passed, even after defeat. The Pure Food bill introduced by ator Tustin, of Philadelphia, and known as ate Bill No. 5, had our heartiest support n beginning to end. This bill had a very ckered career. Probably no measure before er house was amended as frequently as this Even after it had passed both houses it recalled from the Governor, a conference mittee appointed from each house on the day of the legislative session, and practiy a new bill was drafted, which passed the ate and House in the early hours of the ning on the last day without opposition.
s hill as finally passed was undoubtedly the that had been presented, and was approved the Governor. We are greatly indebted to ator Tustin, of Philadelphia, who was the nor of and had charge of the bill in the ate, and to Hon. Andrew B. Hitchcock, of ga county, who had charge of it in the use, for the loyal service they rendered in alf of this measure.

THE GARNISHEE BILL.

This was the only bill that was introduced as ctly an Association measure. It was intro-ed by Hon. Wm. H. Irwin, of Blair county, February 11th. A hearing was held on rch 7th, before the Committee on Judiciary neral. At this hearing at least 150 mer-nts were present from all parts of the te. It was one of the most representative ies and one of the largest to attend any ring during the session, and undoubtedly ited a most favorable impression. The argunt was made by our State Secretary, Mr.
M. Howes. No one could have done better.
presentation of the case was most con-cing, and from beginning to end he held closest attention of every member of the mittee. His ready repartee and prompt wer to all questions propounded by mem-s of the committee won for him their high-admiration, and for the measure their inst and their support. Although closely fol-ed after this we could not get it reported until April 2d. This was largely due to vast amount of work the committee had do. The bill passed second reading about days later, when we expected a fight on it, to have it loaded down with amendments would make it useless, but we succeeded preventing this and it passed this stage nout opposition. It was reached on the d reading calendar on April 25th, but at time there was such a small attendance I afraid to risk it, and requested Mr. Irwin have it "postponed for the present." This nt that it could be called up at our pleas-
On Tuesday morning, April 30th, con-ons seemed to be favorable, and it was ed up and passed finally by a vote of 128 10. It was messaged to the Senate the e day and referred to the Committee on iciary General. A hearing was asked by opponents of the bill, and the date set for y 7th. It was not reached on that day, was had on the 8th. Two attorneys for Pennsylvania Railroad Company and four the Miners' Union appeared against it, and President, Mr. Kaiser, made the argument
it. A desperate fight was made against it some of the committee, and we did not ceed in getting it out until the following nday evening, May 13th. In order to get though at all it had to pass first reading same night, which required unanimous cont. This was denied by Senator McNichol, Philadelphia. This was finally overcome by ator Templeton, of Blair county, offering notion, seconded by Senator Grim, of Bucks unty, that the rule requiring unanimous sent he suspended, which was carried, and bill passed first reading. On Tuesday, the h, we had another struggle to prevent it ng amended so as to put half the costs on creditor. This effort was led by Senators lings, of Venango, and McIlhenny, of Philaphia. We succeeded in getting them to with-w from this position, when later they re-ved the agitation, and we had hard work induce them not to attempt to so amend it. passed second reading the 14th without endment. On the 15th six members of the ners' Union and three Pennsylvania Railroad rneys all joined hands in a final attempt prevent its passage. It passed finally, however, by a vote of 26 to 3, just a constitutional majority. Thus far, so good. I am sorry I cannot make as favorable report as to action of the Governor. Hundreds of letters and telegrams were sent to Governor Stuart from all parts of the State, but on June 10th he saw fit to veto it. It is conceded by all that in his veto message he did not present a single good argument. While our hopes were ultimately dashed to the ground, we should by no means be discouraged. We fought a good fight, our cause was just, and it was a campaign of education that if persistently followed up must eventually lead to success. It is not too soon to begin planning an aggressive campaign for the next Legislature in 1909, and we ought to be strongly in evidence during the political campaign of 1908, when the members of the next Senate and House of Representatives will be elected.

I cannot close this report without expressing my grateful appreciation to the officers and members of the Retail Merchants' Association for their loyal support in the legislative work, but especially I want to commend to your consideration the work of our President, Mr. Albert Kaiser, and our Secretary, Mr. A. M. Howes. Both of these gentlemen were untiring in their support of the work being done at Harrisburg. They were prompt in carrying out every suggestion; in keeping me fully informed as to every development that came under their notice, and they rendered most valuable assistance by keeping the secretaries posted as to what members needed to be seen by their constituents. I am satisfied that very few of our members have any conception of the vast amount of correspondence that was sent out by Mr. Howes during this campaign. He had the matter so well in hand that in any emergency he seemed to know just where a letter or a telegram would do the most good.

Much credit is due to Hon. Wm. H. Irwin, member of the House from Blair county, and to Senator Chambers O. Templeton, also of Blair county, for their co-operation and assistance. Respectfully submitted, WILMER CROW.

MR. MALLOY (Williamsport) at this point presented Mr. Crow with a handsome pocketbook containing $100 in gold. In making the presentation Mr. Malloy said, among other things:

> The officers have taken up the matter of the services rendered by Mr. Crow at Harrisburg, for which he was not paid. Brother Crow did not want to be paid for his work. He would only take the small amount necessary for his actual expenses. The executive officers felt that something should be done as a token of recognition for the valuable services rendered. The Executive Committee had a meeting last night—or this morning, rather—we adjourned about 1.30—and they delegated Mr. Geesey and myself to go out at that hour of the morning and break into some bank and get some small token that men measure up as you have often heard at the rate of 16 to 1. I will wager 16 to 1 we were successful in getting into a bank (laughter), and it is with great pleasure that I have the honor to present this small token to Brother Crow as a token of the appreciation of the officers and members of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Crow, in well chosen words, expressed his thanks and appreciation of the kindly act of the Association. He hoped to be able to do even more in the future than he had in the past, and closed with an earnest appeal to the members of the Association to pay more attention to correspondence from the State Secretary, and to familiarize themselves thoroughly with proposed legislation, so that they could appeal intelligently to their representatives in the Legislature.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. L. R. Clover (Scranton), on behalf of the committee, reported action on resolutions as follows:

"WHEREAS, The legislative campaign in the interest of the retail merchant has closed, and our interests were carefully guarded; and

"WHEREAS, Our representative at Harrisburg, Mr. Wilmer Crow, served our intersts faithfully and well; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we tender our hearty thanks for his faithful, conscientious and self-sacrificing service."

MR. HOWES: I move the adoption of the resolution by a rising vote. Carried.

Question: "Will this convention make known its position on the demand for a parcels post?"

MR. CLOVER: We recommend that the convention place itself on record as being opposed to a parcels post bill.

On motion of Mr. O'Brien the recommendation of the committee was concurred in.

Question: "What can be done to obviate the extortionate charges by the express companies on small packages, which are far in excess of what they should be?"

MR. CLOVER: Inasmuch as the reduction of express charges on small packages would work the same evil as the parcels post law would, it is the opinion of your committee that it is worthy of discussion as to whether anything should be done.

MR. SMEDLEY: Regarding this charge on small parcels of express matter I addressed a meeting here several years ago, and that was one of the questions the merchants of York were particularly interested in. There are two points to consider. The members can co-operatively, I think, in connection with other merchants in their town, arrange to have someone collect their packages and deliver them, saving considerable money. I know that has saved the merchants of York a great deal of money in the last three or four years.

Mr. Hayes (Erie) thought that a reduction of express rates on small packages would work to the detriment of the merchants.

On motion of Mr. Ranck the recommendation of the committee was concurred in.

Question: "The Act of April 12, 1851, Section 4, Pa. Laws 441, according to the legal digest prepared by Attorney E. J. Buckley, forbids any person to sell or expose for sale as hawker, peddler or traveling merchant, any foreign or domestic goods, wares or merchandise other than of his own manufacture. Penalty for violation $50, inflicted by civil action. This act does not apply to persons legally authorized to carry goods for wholesale purposes. Would it be beneficial to the retail merchants of the State to have this act covering Northumberland county amended to cover all sections of the State?"

MR. CLOVER: Your committee believe it would and suggest this matter be referred to the Legislative Committee.

On motion of Mr. Kessler the matter was so referred.

"Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to communicate with each association, requesting that members of auxiliaries use their best effort to secure the election of Senators and Representatives who are friendly to the retail merchants."

Approved by the committee.

Mr. Howes moved its adoption.

SENATOR DRURY: I think that is where our strength ought to lie—in regard to getting legislation through the State. If we will put ourselves on record and organize ourselves, as we should, we can make ourselves felt in this State. This organization has come to stay. Last fall when we elected legislators we invited the candidates at our meeting, and had their promise and support of any measure which we brought forward. If we want to accomplish anything through the Legislature, that is the proper way to do it, and no other. Have the promise of your candidates before you vote for them; not after, because they don't care a picayune after they get your votes, which way they vote in the Legislature.

MR. SMEDLEY: I take it that if we fail to pass this resolution we fail in our duties to ourselves. The passage of this resolution will be practically an endorsement of our legislative work, an endorsement of the members of the House and Senate who stood by us in times of dire extremity. I hope we will get a Legislature elected that will serve our interests, and there is no officer in this convention interested in legislative work who has not been confronted by questions asked by legislators themselves,—"What have you ever done for us?" I tell you, the time is coming when we have got to adopt the sentiment expressed by Senator Drury. We have got to take the candidates for public office and say to them, "We represent vast mercantile interests, and that we represent the people, and that we demand some recognition from our legislators." We go to the members of the Legislature after they are elected, when we have not done anything to help them or to help ourselves. Mr. Crow will bear me out in this statement, that it is no time to get the pledge of a candidate so potent for our good as before he is elected.

(Mr. Smedley cited an experience from Philadelphia of a member of the Legislature breaking his promise to the merchants, the result of which was that he was defeated at the next election.)

MR. HOWES: I would like to see the resolution acted on favorably, on account of the effect it will have on similar organizations throughout the State.

Messrs. Crow (Harrisburg) and Rain (Philadelphia) also spoke in favor of the resolution, which was adopted.

MR. CLOVER: The committee recommends that 1,000 copies of the proceedings of this convention be printed, to include the address "The Master Merchant," and that each local association and delegate be furnished free copies.

This recommendation, on motion of Senator Drury, was concurred in.

Question: What effect has the act of the last Legislature had on the Larkin soap business?

MR. CLOVER: The committee knows of no legislation which was enacted during the last session.

Question: "Is it lawful for a farmer to buy product, such as potatoes, etc. (not of his own production), to peddle and sell said product in a borough or city, without paying a borough or city license? If not lawful, what redress has the merchant in law?"

MR. CLOVER: In the opinion of the committee, this matter has been regulated by Councils of cities and boroughs.

Mr. McNear (Steelton) stated this was one of the sorest afflictions in their neighborhood, and they had not been able to remedy it through local legislation, as yet.

WHEREAS, Convention reports show that there is manifest throughout the State a willingness to advance the public welfare by participating in every municipal movement, industrially, financially and morally; and,

WHEREAS, The work thus far accomplished by our organization must be maintained and protected to the end that the promise of the future may be achieved; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention go on record as being in favor of the formation of a fund in each local organization, to be used by such local association as occasion may require in prosecuting cases of corrupt practices at election and grafting by the incumbents of elective offices.

The purpose of this resolution is distinctly non-political. It simply is designed to insure that the votes and purposes of responsible merchants shall not be overcome by the purchased influence of the corrupt and worthless whom the merchants, it seems, have the burden of feeding and clothing gratuitously under existing Pennsylvania laws.

MR. CLOVER: We are in favor of this resolution and recommend that the sense of the resolution be carried out by each local organization.

On motion of Mr. Howes the recommendation of the committee was concurred in.

Question: "Would it not be advisable for the local associations of this State to select nominees for home elections, and endeavor to elect them to office for their benefit?"

MR. CLOVER: We think it would.

Question: "Can co-operative buying be carried on successfully by ten to fifteen grocers who belong to an association that admits all kinds of merchants?"

MR. CLOVER: In the minds of the committee, we think it can by holding auxiliary meetings; in other words, having your buying circle meetings held separate and apart from your general meetings.

PRESIDENT KAISER: In connection with the establishment of co-operative buying, especially in a small circle, I would advise that you do not adopt co-operative buying simply because some other association has been successful in that department. Investigate your conditions thoroughly and find out whether your people want it,—I mean the people whom you expect to participate in such a movement really want it, and will support it. Co-operative buying is not an easy movement, and unless it is taken hold of heartily it will be a failure. If you think it is going to be successful, then go into it for all it is worth.

Question: "Is it a move in the right direction for two or three local associations of forty or fifty members each to engage a secretary who will devote all his time to association work, taking it for granted that the secretary would have very little expense as to trolley fares?"

MR. CLOVER: We believe that could be done, but that would depend largely on the distance from the different points where the associations were located.

MR. HOWES: That was taken up in Beaver county; it is in its early stages, and we expect great things from it.

A suggestion: That every association furnish their delegate with a button with the name of their town on it, so when you meet a man you can see at a glance where he is from.

MR. CLOVER: We recommend that suggestion.

On motion, recommendation concurred in.

Question: "Why should not the farmers' scales and measures, and also peddlers, be inspected, as well as the merchants and business men's, by the State Inspector?"

MR. CLOVER: We certainly believe they should be inspected, but there is no State Inspector to do the work.

Mr. Kessler (Erie) suggested the only way out of the difficulty was to have a law passed whereby every man who comes in the city to sell anything has got to have the weight and measure stamped by the sealer of weights and measures. It had been done in Erie, he said, and was one of the best things ever done for the merchants.

PRESIDENT KAISER: During the last session of the Legislature two or three attempts were made for the passage of a law providing for a scaler of weights and measures, with fees. Through correspondence we objected very strenuously against the enactment of these laws, promising the support of the State organization to support any proper law for the inspection of weights, but we would not stand for a fee system, unless it provided for a fixed fee that would be very small, and only collected at certain stages. None of the hills passed, but I believe sooner or later we will get such a law.

The following resolutions were approved by the committee, and adopted by the convention:

"Resolved, That this Association is opposed to the enactment of any parcels post hill, and the Secretary is directed to communicate our opposition to President Roosevelt, the Postmaster General and Pennsylvania Senators and Congressmen, and to communicate with each local association, requesting similar action."

"WHEREAS, The collection of a mercantile tax by the State from merchants of this Commonwealth is a burden that should be lifted; be it

"Resolved, That this convention authorize its Executive Committee to commence a campaign for its abolishment."

"WHEREAS, The Eleventh Annual Convention is about drawing to a close, and desiring to express our appreciation of the many courtesies extended; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we tender to the Retail Merchants' Association of York our heartfelt thanks for their openhanded hospitality and the many acts of kindness which have made our stay in their midst most pleasant, causing us to carry away feelings of joy at the spirit of true fraternity thus manifested."

"Resolved, That the thanks of the convention be tendered to the York Silk Mills for courtesies extended to the ladies attending the convention."

"Resolved, That the thanks of the convention be tendered to the officials of the city and county of York for courtesies extended, and to the press for the fair and generous reports of our proceedings."

Senator Drury inquired, at this point, what had been done by the commission appointed at the last session of the Legislature to inquire into the cost of living.

Mr. Holmeyer stated he had been informed that the commission had discovered the price of high living in Pittsburg was due to the trust problem in the respect that the prices are set, and the commission men are compelled to ask a certain price for goods before they reached Pittsburg, it having been proven that the wholesalers make over 300 per cent.;

that the trading stamp and such schemes increased the price of living only from three to five per cent.

Mr. Spangler stated that he did not think the commission made the trading stamp feature a part of their report. Co-operative buying, he said, was suggested by members of the Association; that if the merchants of Pittsburg would come together as an association and eliminate all these things, they could reduce the prices and treat customers better.

PRESIDENT KAISER: We will now have the report of the Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

A. M. HOWES, Secretary.

PRESIDENT KAISER: Regarding the question asked here yesterday, the Directors of the company met last evening and referred this question to Mr. John A. Hoober, a very prominent attorney in this city, and I have his opinion, which I will now read:

"Responsive to your question as to liability under the premium note on the application for insurance in the Retailers' M. F. I. Co., I beg to advise: An applicant under this premium note cannot be called on for an amount in excess of the amount stated in said note, by assessment for less, necessary expenses, or any other purpose; in other words, it is competent in law for the company and the insured to contract that no liability be incurred by the insured beyond the stipulated sum in the premium note, and this is plainly intended in the company's application, doubtless to be protective against the unlimited liability which many insurers met some years ago in other mutual companies. I might add, parentheticallly, that I know of one other Pennsylvania company doing business on both a cash and mutual basis that has protected its mutual policy holders by a similar limited liability clause in its premium note."

PRESIDENT KAISER: I will state that the note contract was drawn up by a prominent insurance attorney in this State, and we are confident that we have, as far as the plan and scope of the insurance company are concerned, the best plan of any mutual in the State; we think it is safest, and we believe we are doing business more cheaply than any other company; we know we are going to save you still more money in the future.

SECRETARY HOWES: I will read the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the delegates of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, in convention assembled, express our appreciation of the fair rulings on all questions of debates in this convention work by the President of our said State Association, Mr. Kaiser."

I move the adoption of the resolution by a rising vote.

The resolution was so adopted.

PRESIDENT KAISER: I thank you, gentlemen.

MR. CHEATLE (St. Marys): What is the amount of a premium note for $1,000?

PRESIDENT KAISER: The premium is half the old line rate, and the premium note is fifteen times the premium which you pay.

MR. TEMPLETON (Butler): How much insurance can you take out on your stock or building?

PRESIDENT KAISER: The by-laws of the company permit an amount up to $3,000 on a single risk; however, it has been the policy of the officers to keep the risks down to $2,000 or less up until the surplus reaches a certain sum. If we feel the risk is an extraordinarily good one, we take a little more than another one.

MR. TEMPLETON: That amount can be taken only on a building by one person? Suppose there were four stories and four people?

PRESIDENT KAISER: It would come under one risk; yes, sir.

REPORT OF ELECTION BOARD.

Secretary Howes at this point read the report of the tellers, with the following result of the election:

President, Albert Kaiser, Philadelphia.

First Vice-President, Wilmer Crow, Harrisburg.

Second Vice-President, S. W. McCuen, Oil City.

Third Vice-President, L. K. Schroeder, Columbus.

Secretary, A. M. Howes, Erie.

Financial Secretary, E. J. Morris, Reading.

Treasurer, W. H. Nelson, Chester.

Executive Committee: P. M. Malloy, Williamsport; A. S. Deeter, Reading.

Next convention city, New Castle.

On motion of Mr. Edgar (Frankford) the selection of New Castle was made unanimous.

CREDIT RATING SYSTEM.

SECRETARY HOWES: The Executive Committee present to local associations the credit rating sheet adopted by the Bradford Business Men's Association.

Mr. Geesey (York) moved that the convention recommend to local associations the adoption of this sheet, and that the State Association provide each local association with a copy of it.

The motion was seconded.

PRESIDENT KAISER: This is a recommendation of the Executive Committee, and embodied in that recommendation is the provision that this list will be received by nobody but the Secretary of the Association.

After some discussion, which brought out the consensus of opinion that such a method was a step in the right direction, the motion of Mr. Geesey was carried.

NEW BUSINESS.

Senator Drury (Pittston) suggested, under this head, that the Association take some action in regard to an organizer, especially in the Wilkes-Barre District.

Secretary Howes stated that this matter was now receiving the consideration of the Executive Committee, and he believed that plans would be laid to extend, as far as practicable, the organization work during the next two years.

Mr. Geesey (York) moved that the Executive Committee be requested to give special attention, and make a special effort for a reorganization in Wilkes-Barre.

Seconded and carried.

UNIFORMED SECRETARIES.

SENATOR DRURY: We took up in our Association the other evening the question of supplying our Secretary with a uniform. Don't you think it a good idea to have the Secretaries put in uniform?

This suggestion brought forth considerable merriment, and amusing suggestions and incidents by various delegates, but resulted in no definite action.

Secretary Howes here read the following telegram from Hon. J. C. Delaney, Chief Factory Inspector, Harrisburg:

"MR. CLARENCE A. GEESEY,

"Secretary Pennsylvania Association Retail Dealers, York, Pa.

"If the Townsend bill had passed the last Legislature and became a law, your organization would have lost all the privileges in the way of open stores any evenings, even holidays, which you enjoy under existing laws. Remember, eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

SECRETARY HOWES: Mr. Geesey has been in conversation with Mr. Delaney, who desires the co-operation of this organization in consideration of any closing-hour laws before the Legislature. We have not solicited this. The law he refers to, if passed, would have not permitted the stores to be open any evening—no store that employs clerks.

On motion of Mr. Smedley the matter was referred to the Executive Committee.

VOTE OF THANKS TO THE OFFICERS.

MR. SMEDLEY: We passed a resolution thanking the President for his fair and impartial rulings during the sessions of the convention. As one in this State who knows the hard work of the officers of your organization, I think, before we adjourn, we should pass a resolution of thanks to the President, Secretary and various officers of this organization for their self-sacrificing devotion to our interests during the past year. I therefore move that the thanks of this convention be tendered to the officers for their self-sacrificing labors in our behalf during the past year.

Seconded and carried.

PRESIDENT KAISER: Your sentiments expressed and support given during this convention have been sufficient thanks, as far as your President is concerned.

On motion of Mr. Smedley, the reading of the minutes was dispensed with.

PRESIDENT KAISER: Before adjournment, I beg to express my personal thanks to the people of York, the officials, their merchants, and officers of their Association, and committee for the very liberal entertainment, and very open hospitality extended to the delegates to this convention. I know I voice the sentiment of every member present. I also beg to thank the delegates for their prompt attendance and their continued attention during the sessions of the convention, and for the honor that you have again conferred upon me.

The convention, at 12.25 P. M., adjourned to meet in New Castle in 1908.

MEETING OF THE SECRETARIES' ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Secretaries' Association was called to order at 8 P. M. by President William Smedley, in the Court House, York, Pa., August 21, 1907.

The meeting was opened by the singing of "America," in which all those present joined with patriotic enthusiasm.

On motion of Mr. E. J. Morris, the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with.

Secretary Howes called the roll, showing forty-six secretarics in attendance.

The following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing year:

President, William Smedley.

Vice-Presidents: D. M. Evans, Pittston; I. W. Ranck, Shamokin; W. C. Armstrong, Connellsville; E. O'Brien, New Castle; G. W. Tozier, G. L. Dobie, C. A. Stuart.

On motion of Mr. Geesey, the by-laws were amended, increasing the number of vice-presidents from five to seven.

Secretary, A. M. Howes.

PRESIDENT SMEDLEY: The subject assigned for the meeting is "Weak Spots in Our Armor?" I trust the members will at once avail themselves of the privilege of opening up this discussion. I feel quite sure after the very delightful day we have had here, the magnificent speeches that we have heard, that we have discovered, as a result of all the talks, a number of weak spots in our armor. I have; and it occurs to me that one of the most significant weaknesses in our armor, as it applies to organization work in general—and I think part of it belongs to the Secretary and the other portion belongs to the members—is the statement made this morning by the Food Commissioner that in four years $360,000 had been collected from the merchants of this State in fines resulting from prosecutions by the Food Department. Suppose we had $360,000 for the purposes of the organization? That was taken from the pockets, perhaps, of members of this organization, and it would have been just as easy for them to have contributed one-fourth of that to the Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania. With such a fund, and an organization so perfect, they would not have collected $360,000 in four years. There are a great many weak spots in the Secretary's armor. The first weakness is lack of inspiration, ambition and willingness. I think another thing is that we lack purpose. There is no question at all that without purpose we cannot progress. We should have some definite purpose, the accomplishment of some good thing for our organization and for ourselves. When secretaries tell me of the salary they receive I am often led to believe that the salary they get is all they are worth. Therefore, I think that is a weak spot in the Secretary's armor. I believe that the office of secretary of a local association is one of the most honored professions we can have. I do not like the word "professional" secretary, but, nevertheless, there is the amateur secretary and the professional secretary. I believe that where a man has brought his organization up to the point that he becomes experienced and well equipped to handle an organization, he should be put in the professional class. I believe that one reason why some associations do not pay secretaries more money is because they lack ambition to make their offices lucrative. Another weakness is a failure to keep in touch with other secretaries throughout the State. The State Secretary and Secretary of our Association is one constantly trying to get in touch with local secretaries. There are two easy ways in which that could be accomplished. In the first place, your State Secretary is always open to receive letters from you. In our city we publish a small paper and send it to our secretaries. There is no reason in the world why the Secretaries' Department in that paper should not contain every month a brief letter from the secretaries of local associations, giving us in brief a little history of the month's work, or a suggestion or inquiry along lines that would lead to the betterment of each one of us. You can learn from me, and I can learn far more from you. We come to the convention, catch the enthusiastic fire of the meetings, then go home and forget each other. We should go home and resolve that somehow during the year we will get in touch one with the other. There is no reason why our ideas should not be passed along, why I should not help you, and why you should not help me. I appeal to you along this line to do that. I will go to any extent of labor in order to keep in mind this exchange of ideas, if we can only start it. We do need a clearing house. Another weak spot is the lack of trained secretaries—if we propose to maintain our organization. I do not want you to believe that the Secretary is the whole thing, but he is one of the spokes in the wheel, and he is one of the executive officers upon whose shoulder much depends. We must train ourselves and then help to train others. There has got to be a time when we will stop having towns organized. We have got to have a force of men trained that we can put in a town.

Another weak spot that I notice in the local reports is the lack of agencies for the Fire Insurance Company. If the Secretary is interested in the insurance department and can get his members interested along that line, he adds to the income. It is a deplorable weakness to ignore the insurance department. Another thing is lack of initiative. I believe there are two classes of secretaries—the secretary who does and the secretary who does not.

The one who does is the man who is planning and thinking to lead his organization further along; then there is the other secretary whose only ambition is to do what he has to do, and to do it as quickly as possible, and not do anything else. Those are the secretaries that are going to get down and out of the race. Get the confidence of your members and you can do anything with them. These remarks are only preliminary to the discussion.

SECRETARY HOWES: I believe, from observation of the secretaries, that the very ure of an organization may be traced to a secretary. The most discouraging featur my work is the disposition of many secret not to answer necessary business corres ence. The principal difficulty of this me is that those poor fellows are not here, of them. I don't know how to reach During the legislative session I had oc to send some of them telegrams. That di move them, even sending them postage st and postal cards. That is why some of organizations fail. To those secretaries like the work the harvest is ready. I b an organization, like a merchant, must tise. I keep on file in my office a reco all eligible firms in the city that are not bers, and periodically I canvass them, in person or hy mail. I find it to adva to get out a circular letter occasionally, e mg an application, and bringing out some of association work. Every time you lose member, get two more. That is a good to grow.

Another weak point in our armor is f to read trade papers. I believe trade and convention proceedings are the secret text-books, and I know of the things we accomplished at Erie, some of the best we have originated with some little orga tion. I believe the secretary ought alwa looking for ideas. Secretaries are to largely for the faults of our organization, as merchants are to blame for their bus troubles. I study every business organiz I come in contact with. From each of you will learn some practical thing. I b the secretaries ought to keep in close with and visit the members; they should c their dues closely. Non-attendance at ings is the principal reason for discourage of the secretary. I believe secretaries plan their meetings and make them intere will draw the members. The insurance sition is a good thing. Since the Reta was organized our members at Erie, I be have saved more money in insurance pre than all they have paid in dues, and we saved nearly $6,000 in premiums.

The exemption waivers should be used they are of great practical benefit to the and butcher particularly. It is an agree in duplicate between the merchant and tomer that in consideration of the extensi credit to a limited amount the customer w the operation of the exemption law. I b the experience of those who have used waivers has been that the merchant is a secured in almost every case from loss.

MR. GEESEY: The Merchants' Associ can be made a great success if the Secr has an object and makes it a point to that object. I find it depends upon the S tary to make the meeting interesting. the time of the institution of the Reta Mutual Fire Insurance Company it was work to hold up the interest of the me of the Association. Just as soon as we that feature we took on new members, were to hold the old members, and have them more interest in the Association. I belie good, live secretary will have a good, live o ization. To-day the Merchants' Associatio York is on the very best terms with local labor organization. The secretary creeps into a little shell, in my opinio always sure to make a failure. You have this eye—"Keep an eye on York." That originated by the Merchants' Association sooner had we adopted it than the large m facturers asked if they could use it on stationery.

Mr. Malloy, of Williamsport, stated th his opinion the office of secretary was n enviable one. The secretary should tell merchants of the benefits they derive fro Association, and the money saved by the tion of bad features in the business.

Mr. Edgar, of Frankford, voiced the ments expressed by the previous speakers good motto for the secretary to take, he was, "He that expecteth little shall neve disappointed." It is all work; you have g start from the ground up. The secretary got to shut his eyes to the discouraging t and go ahead as though his life depende the movement, without regard to the su he gets. He has got to show his peopl can make it interesting and profitable for t Co-operative buying seems to be the issue with the grocery end of an organiza Co-operative buying should not be done in other way than on a cash basis, cash bu and cash selling. "I believe in reading trade papers," concluded Mr. Edgar. "I lieve the experience of Mr. Smedley, Howes and myself could be used to adva to some organizations just starting out. only too glad to give information, and promptly answer any communication that ceive."

Mr. Brown, of Altoona, thought the for failure of an organization did not al rest with the secretary. The members sh pay their dues, and if a member was enough interested in the association to his dues the association was better off wi him.

Mr. E. J. Morris (Reading) told of th vantages of keeping in touch with other s tarics. When a bill was presented in Re Councils last spring to tax the merchant the city, Mr. Morris wrote to Mr. Brow Altoona, for information on the subjec to their experience with such a measur Altoona. The result of Mr. Brown's was that the Reading bill was defeated.

Mr. Stuart, of Carbondale, thought the retary should visit the members often, ta them on subjects nearest to their heart, get them to attend the meetings. Look at members; study them individually.

Mr. Clover, of Scranton, felt the weak in his armor had been strengthened by at the Secretaries' meeting. He also believed members should be seen as often as pos-

r. Armstrong, of Connellsville, said their od of dealing with the deadbeat was by ishing judgments obtained against debtors sale. It was perfectly legal, providing ing was inserted in the advertisement re- ing upon the man's failure.

r. Evans, of Pittston, said the best induce- t they had for merchants to join the asso- on was the fire insurance feature. They written over $100,000 insurance.

answer to the question "Will Dr. C. H. worth explain how they are organizing hboring towns?" the doctor said: "We a member well acquainted in the town; isits all the merchants and tells them some the advantages of membership in the or- zation. If they are inclined to join the ciation we take about a dozen members go over and hold the next meeting in that . I do not think we have ever failed to g in about ten or a dozen new members."

r. Templeton (Butler) said he had gained e information at the meeting than at the le convention. He thought the members of association should bolster up the secretary, vice versa.

r. Tozier told of the success of a banquet held last January. "If all the merchants tell their woes to other merchants," he , "I don't think there would be any trou- at all on that line."

r. Kaiser was the last speaker of the even- and said, among other things:

This discussion seems to be a self-attain- t of the secretaries. The second question, he weakness in the armor, was only touched n a small way. There is no doubt but that success of an association depends very ely upon the work and jurgment of the secretary. You have to consider at all times that the secretary, in a very large measure, is subject to the influence of certain members of an organization. It is due to the officers of an organization, not only your secretary, but all the officers, to be in absolute touch, not only with the organization and its work, but with the local conditions with which they are coping. In my experience with organization work I find the average business man does not want outside interference in his personal affairs, yet the average man, when connected with an organization, wants somebody else to clear the road so that he can go along without any trouble and effort. Most of the evils of the retail merchant are the result of competition, and most of it the result of competition of men who do not know each other. As they become acquainted the undesirable methods of competition fade away. We want to bring the merchant up to an honorable plane; we want him to reach out and increase his business and broaden his commercial ideas; we want him to know that not by holding back the other fellow can he win the race, but, by becoming a stronger man, pass him on the road. If we have a condition in our community which seems to hold some of us back, let us see how we can pass over that condition, if not remove it. You know at one time it was all peddling. The mercantile business is only the outgrowth of the peddling business.

"I want to say to the secretaries that, if they will direct their attention to the expansion of business and the improvement of their home conditions, of whatever nature, they will soon find the merchants with them, not only supporting the secretary, but pushing him forward, and the underpaid secretary will be a thing of the past."

At this point, 10.20 P. M., the meeting adjourned.

/e would be pleased to have for publication this column the ideas of our readers upon le topics, it being understood that we do hold ourselves responsible for any views ressed therein. All communications must accompanied by the writer's name and ad- ss as an evidence of good faith, but not essarily for publication. Dear Sir:—The present situ- ion on salmon is unprecedented; olumbia River is short over 50 er cent.; there has been an al- most entire failure of sockeyes on Puget Sound and in British Columbia, and the pack of red Alaska salmon is at least 500,000 cases short of last year, which, taken in connection with the almost entire depletion of spot stocks, means that there has not been sufficient salmon packed during this season to supply the world's normal requirements, and that before 1908 packing salmon is available higher prices will obtain than ever before in the history of the industry.

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 28, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market continues steady, with fair demand, but with little alteration in prices. There appears to be more activity in a general way, but little pressure for sales.

Pepper.—The market is more active, but practically unchanged. We note a fair business in futures and very steady prices.

Cayennes are somewhat firmer. Mombassas are now offered more freely.

Cloves.—Futures are quoted lower. Spot stock is scarce and the demand very good.

Pimento (Allspice).—The crop is without question small, and prices are firm and likely to advance any time.

Mace.—On account of the very excellent demand, prices keep firm, especially for prime stock.

Nutmegs.—Market steady, but unchanged. Grinding grades are in active demand, prices being somewhat higher.

Cassias firmer, but prices have not changed during the week. The demand is increasing.

Gingers, while firm, are unchanged. Nothing new to report.

Seeds.—Poppy continues scarce. Coriander much higher, due to political troubles in Africa. Caraway is very firm; prices are steady.

Yours truly,

The Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 30, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sirs:—There has been liberal buying of tomatoes for prompt shipment, and the outlook is for continued activity. The weather conditions continue favorable, though a hotter temperature for a couple of weeks would be an improvement. Sunshine is nature's great colorist of tomatoes. In our previous letter we noticed an inclination to buy tomatoes for delivery later on, in medium sized lots, at the present prices, and this week that demand has continued and extended to all grades, principally in lots of one or two carloads. The prices at the opening of the week were a shade lower than the closing prices of the week previous, because of the lower cost of the fresh tomatoes, with better quality, and they closed to-day practically at the same figures, there being little or no fluctuations in the market all week. It looks safe to buy tomatoes for prompt shipment.

During the week scarcely an article in the list of canned vegetables was neglected, though the bulk of the demand was for the same lines that have been active throughout the month, peas, string beans, sweet potatoes, etc.

There is no change in the peach situation here. The receipts of the fresh fruit for canning purpose averaged about the same in quantity, quality and cost to the canner as in the week previous. The offerings of the canned article continue exceedingly small. Think of it, not a case of unpeeled pie peaches offered for sale in the last two weeks, right in the heart of the canning season.

Gooseberries advanced from $1.05 to $1.20, and spot pears are nearly sold out. No new pears are offered yet; crop very short. Pie grated pineapples are getting scarcer. Every article in the line of canned fruits is strong, and so are cove oysters.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

The Sugar Market.

New York, August 29, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We have had a firm but dull market all the week. A few Porto Rico sugars have been sold at 3.92 cents, and that price is to-day the nominal quotation. The refiners will not make that bid for further lots, but a fair sized line of sugar, offered firm, could very likely be sold at 3.92 cents.

The raw market is firm, kept so by the comparatively small stocks left in the hands of the holders and the knowledge that those stocks will be needed by the refiners before the season's end. The strong statistical position of sugar and the advances in the European markets are counterbalancing the depressing effect caused by inactivity here and the more than adequate supplies for current needs held by our refiners; but the situation lacks the tone and life that should be present at this time of year, and the demand for refined has fallen into a rut, the country for the most part subsisting upon the stocks still left in the hands of the dealers, and the dealers replenishing upon a hand-to-mouth basis, fearful as to entering into new contracts with the refiners because of the reports coming in from all sections of the country regarding diminished fruit crops. The sugar stocks held throughout the country are being lessened every day, there has been a slight improvement in withdrawals here, the actual consumption so far this year still shows an increase over that for the same period in 1906, and there is yet no reason to suppose that the total for this year will be under that of 1906. The yearly increase of population means extra supplies to be provided and will probably offset the lessened demand caused this year by the damage to the fruits.

Europe's reports this week have been excellent. Prices there are higher, closing this afternoon at a figure almost up to their highest so far this season. Their quotation is now equal to 4.11 cents for raw beet sugar landed at New York. They are having a good trade demand and their markets are being upheld also through the light offerings, owners being wi ing to carry stocks in view of t probability of a continental be crop at least not exceeding th of last year.

The first Java cargo of this se son to arrive at New York ca in this week. New Orleans had Java cargo last week, the first arrive there in many years. It understood that two other Ja ships have orders to proceed New Orleans.

Refined Sugar.—The list pric of the American Sugar Refini Co., Howell, and Arbuckle, r main unchanged on a basis granulated at 4.90 cents, less per cent. cash, orders being plac at 4.80 cents. The Federal quot 4.70 cents, less 1 per cent. prom shipment, and 4.80 cents, less per cent. delayed shipment. Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is b explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and va to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated v appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Gunpowder Tea.

The Chinese name for this is Yuen Choo (round pearls). Its English name is derived from its irregular lumps which resemble the large grain of blasting powder. It is the finest kind of green tea, and consists of the early spring leaf buds, and particularly the fine hairy summits of the youngest branches of the shrub, which after being carefully picked are rolled and rounded by hand so as to have a granular appearance. One kind is known as Moyune, another as Imperial. Like other green teas gunpowder tea is prepared from the same plant as black teas, but roasted immediately after gathering, and in another manner.

Question: * * *—We hereby dly request information on the owing transaction: Some time spring we bought a deal on rn Kinks from one of our local bers which was as follows: th five cases (delivered), at a tain price, they agreed to mail our customers, of which we fur- hed a list, 185 souvenir postal ds, with coupons attached d for one package of Korn ks, this to be given free to h customer who would present coupon. Out of these 185 we eemed 145 coupons. Through pell of sickness we somehow ed to turn these over at an ly date. However, there was time specified when to do so. the meantime the jobbing house changed representatives. After my recovery I asked their new man whether they would still redeem the coupons and he said they would, that they were good any time. So about two weeks ago we had them ready and asked him to take them along. He then said they had quit redeeming them on the first of August, but they never notified us to that effect. But he agreed to take them along and try to turn them in yet for us, after which we received the inclosed letter. Now, can we hold them for this amount or must we lose it? If we can hold them for this amount can we deduct it from one of their bills when we pay it?

Answer.—The jobber's letter to the above correspondent is as follows:—

> In regard to the Korn Kink coupons given to our Mr. ————, would say that we cannot redeem them at this late date. The Korn Kinks people have failed, and we are told they are $3,000,000 in the hole, but are expecting to reorganize. In case they do we may be able to do something for you.

Two questions are involved here, first, who was the other party to the contract to redeem, in other words, who agreed to redeem these coupons, the jobber or the Korn Kinks Company; and, second, were they presented for redemption within a reasonable time? If the concern that actually promised to redeem was the manufacturer, and the jobber simply circulated the manufacturer's advertising matter among the retail trade, it is the manufacturer who has defaulted on the contract, and the only action which the correspondent has is against him. Naturally it would do him little or no good to bring suit against a bankrupt concern.

On the contrary, if it was the jobber, under his own name, who agreed to redeem, then he is responsible to this retailer for his failure to do so, regardless of the manufacturer's collapse. For the jobber, simply because the other party to his contract, i. e., the manufacturer, has defaulted, cannot get square by lying down on his own agreement.

But the jobber, in this view of the case, is responsible only if the correspondent presented his coupons within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is not always easy to determine. In this case the coupons were circulated in the spring, no date being set for their redemption. They were presented for redemption in August, which in my judgment is within a reasonable time. Clearly, after having induced this correspondent to buy goods on the strength of a coupon scheme which is without a date limit, the jobber cannot arbitrarily, some time after that, set a date beyond which redemption would not be made, without notifying every person who bought.

If the facts of this case are as I have outlined, I advise this correspondent that he can recover for these coupons from the jobber, and can set off his claim against any claim which the jobber may have against him; that is, he can deduct it from any bill which he owes the jobber.

Don't Get the Jobber Rubbed the Wrong Way
If you, Mr. Retailer, have signed any future canned goods contracts, ask your jobber what per cent. of your order he will absolutely guarantee to give you.
In most cases he will make no guarantee whatever. He can't, since the packer has made none to him.
In no case except one will he make a guarantee to deliver you all you ordered, or 100 per cent. That one case is where he buys Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods, for we, who sell those brands, always give a jobber 100 per cent. contracts on them, and the jobber can therefore give it to you.
The moral is to buy the brands that will give you what you buy.

Is This Your Idea of a Leader?
A great many grocers don't really know what a leader means; say a "coffee leader." To them it's just a coffee to be sold at a quarter.
In reality, a leader is a sample of your store; an illustration of your business methods; a thing by which the buyer can judge the rest of your stock; a bait to get orders for other things.
And all these offices a leader will fill—if it is our Moco-Mo Coffee. You can profitably sell it at 25 cents. As will be seen by these figures the catch of sardines in France for the past five years has been much below normal. Sardine fishing along the coast for the present season began the latter part of June, and there are indications for a much larger catch this year if the fish keep coming to the coast, as the opening fishing seemed to indicate.

Magazine Notes.

A Rival to Sherlock Holmes.

Conan Doyle, Anna Katharine Green, and other writers of detective stories had better look to their laurels, for into their chosen field has come a new writer—new, that is, to that particular form of fiction—who seems destined to take a very high place. This is Carolyn Wells, who makes her debut as a writer of detective stories with a complete novel called "A Chain of Evidence," in the September "Lippincott's." Miss Wells' plot deals with the solution of a murder mystery in which the victim was killed in a way almost, but not quite, unknown in the annals of crime. The guilty party contrives to leave practically no clue, and the detective connected with the case—Fleming Stone—is hard put to it to ascertain who is the murderer. The reader is kept in suspense to the very end—the supreme test of a good detective story. In Fleming Stone Miss Wells has drawn a character decidedly original, and quite different from the Sherlock Holmes brand, such as we encounter in most modern detective stories. Other features of unusual interest in this September issue of "Lippincott's" are essays on "Queen Dolly" Madison and the poet Shelley, by Mrs. La Salle Corbell Pickett and George L. Knapp respectively, and short stories by Lloyd Buchanan, Elsie Singmaster, Elliott Flower, Joseph M. Rogers, E. Ayrton-Zangwill, Prince Vladimir Vaniatsky, and Robert Sterling Blair. The usual department of humor, "Walnuts and Wine," is brimful of laughs this month.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

An Iced Tea Window.

The accompanying illustration will give an idea as to what will be a very seasonable window.

First, get a good-sized Japanese parasol, open the same and hang upside down from the centre of the ceiling of the window; hang Japanese panels on the sides of the window.

Secure a large-sized thermometer, or if you cannot get one, make an imitation of one, and mark it about the degree that the weather has been the past few days, say, about 80 or 90 degrees, and hang it in a prominent place in the window.

Place a small table in the back of the window, and on this table place drinking glasses filled with tea or colored water to resemble tea, placing a straw in each glass.

To make it very realistic, place dolls on chairs at the table in the act of helping themselves.

Place a pyramid of package tea on either side of the back corners of the window, and finish up by filling the floor of the window with black tea, just enough to cover all bare spots, using the green tea to make the letters as shown in the illustration.

Place a card as shown with these words:—

> THIS IS THE WEATHER FOR ICED TEAS—TRY OURS.

This window is inexpensive and will attract the public to the window.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

St. Louis.

The action of the St. Louis Butter and Egg Dealers' Association in notifying the retail trade that after September 1st all accounts will have to be paid by the 10th of the month and that failure to do so will cause such delinquents to be reported to the association secretary and all further credit stopped until the members of the association have been paid, meets with the full approval of the organized retail grocers.

St. Paul, Minn.

By far the most drastic measure which has been taken to make retail grocers more careful with credits is the action taken by the St. Paul (Minn.) Association, which proposes to impose a fine on all of its members who extend credit to a customer where there is an account which is unpaid after the thirty days which the association says is a reasonable time for payment.

The resolution, which was passed by the association a few days ago, is as follows:—

> Whereas, the retail grocers are required to settle each Thursday with the commission houses and pay their bills for purchases in full, and are required to settle and pay bills made with the wholesale houses each thirty days.
> Resolved, That the Secretary is hereby instructed to inspect the books of retailers, and in all cases found where credit is given customers exceeding the period of thirty days, impose a fine of $5.00 therefor.

This action was brought abo because members of the associ tion have become so careless collecting their accounts and forgetful of what the associatio recommended that a more seve penalty should be handed tho who are unmindful of the fact th collections must be made fro consumers if it is expected th the bills of the jobber are to paid.

What's Your Most Valuable Fixture?

A number of representative groc were gathered together the other and the talk turned on the relative va of different fixtures. Every one of men present was one who fully app ciated the value of up-to-date fixtu of the store, and some interesting id were exchanged. The talk finally turn on the discussion of what each m considered the most valuable fixture his store, and out of sixteen men pres thirteen named the American slic machine. Two of the men present w large Chicago grocers, and the from various places out of town, pr cipally the smaller towns.

One of the thirteen expressed a reas for his belief very well when he sa "I suppose I have in my store as m up-to-date fixtures of one kind or other as any grocer in the country, a there are very few of them that h not proven of the greatest valu me. Many of them save me ti and labor, and save me considera money as well; but my American slic machine not only saves me time labor, and gets me a better profit ont each sale I make in this line, but satisfaction extends to my custom who are more than pleased at the ap tizing, uniform slices which we are a to give them. I do not think any of people who have once bought the m which we slice on our machine could persuaded to make their purchases wh only hand-slicing was the rule, and find that they tell their friends about also."

This man's experience has been same as that of thousands of other m chants, everywhere. Any store handl sliced meats, no matter how small trade in this line, cannot afford to without the machine. Your sliced m trade may be small when you start, it will not stay small for any length time after you have installed the m chine.

Buy Your Cheese and Delicatessen Here

You should buy your cheese, your delicatessen and your fancy groceries from me because I not only have made a specialty of these goods but because I carry full lines of all of them and can in most cases sell you cheaper than you can buy elsewhere.

All my goods are strictly high grade and from the best manufacturers in the world.

Let me quote you prices.

CARL WILDE, 357 N. Second Street, Philadelphia

—An Out-of-the-usual Specialty—

No grocery store with just the hackneyed groceries—sugar and soap and cheese—ever does a very large business or makes much money.

It's the store with the snappy little specialties—the new things—the out-of-the-usual things—that charms the extra pennies out of people's pockets and gets ahead.

Bismarck Heringe is one of these out-of-the-usuals. It's a foreign canned fish specialty, delicious and appetizing, and not even imitated in this country. Cured in pure vinegar and spices.

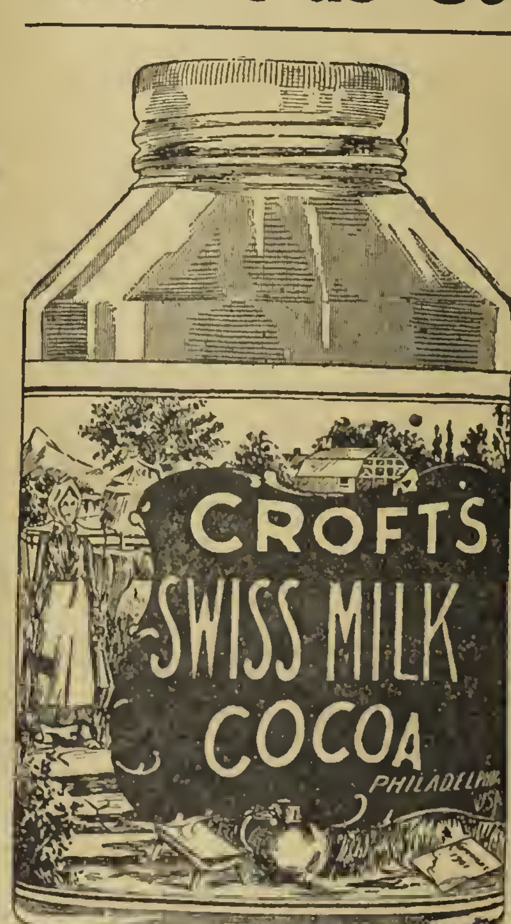
How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours



Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

It Is Spelled R=A=M=L=Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

A Tip to Grocers Who are in Business to Make Money

Nothing will clean Porcelain Bath Tubs and all enameled ware as quickly and thoroughly as Porcela—which means you please your customers by recommending it. You not only make as good, or a better profit on it than you do on many inferior articles of a similar character, but byconcentrating your efforts on its sale alone you are certain of a very handsome present as a reward for your efforts, as every case contains Universal Coupons, and it won't take you long to get enough of them to entitle you to almost anything you may need—a new Safe, Roll-Top Desk, Standard Platform Scales, new Harness, or even a good Wagon. The same coupons are packed in Radax and Tilo.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co.

Offices and Showrooms
18 to 24 S. Seventh St.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

Why Cocoa Is Higher Than for Twenty-five Years

All Authorities Agree That It Is Because Cocoa Beans Are So High, But Opinions Differ as to Why. Louis Runkel Says Natural Conditions Such as Short Crop and Increased Demand Are Responsible. Another Authority Says Speculation Has Done It.

There is at the present time considerable speculation among the trade as to the cause of the existing high prices of cocoa. All manufacturers agree that the cause is the high prices of the cocoa bean, but their explanations as to what makes cocoa beans high is not clear.

As to what this moving cause is, there is some difference of opinion among manufacturers apparently. The "Grocery World" has received copies of two statements on the subject, one issued by Louis Runkel, of Runkel Bros., New York, and the other by Verlog des Gordian, of Hamburg, Germany. The two take exactly opposite positions, and portions of both are reproduced for the information of the trade.

Mr. Runkel's statement is in part as follows:—

Within the last ten months the price of cocoa has steadily advanced in price until to-day it is 90 per cent. higher than it was at that time and higher in value than it has been for over twenty-five years, and the fact is that the cheapest grades of cocoa beans are worth almost as much to-day as the finer grades. Some manufacturers of confectionery who use the article whether in large or small quantities have not so far recognized the fact that it will affect them collectively to the extent of six million dollars, and this advance is not caused from any speculation, notwithstanding the fact that that statement has prevailed for the last nine or ten months.

When the first advance on cocoa beans came along it was stated that the article had been cornered in Europe, and in Europe the manufacturers stated that it had been cornered in America. Now, nothing of the kind has happened. What has happened is the fact that the increase in consumption, according to statistics, proves conclusively that the increase in the use of chocolate and cocoa, and chocolate confectionery, has throughout the world been growing at an average rate of from 18 per cent. to 22 per cent. If you multiply that by five, you find that in five years there has been one hundred per cent. increase in the consumption of an article which is not produced, like many others, where you have a crop which will grow every year, like wheat or cotton, but is produced by the planting of trees, which take from five to twenty years to yield the mature fruit, which is the cocoa bean of commerce of to-day.

Therefore this increase in consumption in five years of one hundred per cent. and the failure within the last two years of two successive crops in the principal countries where the cocoa bean grows, has brought about this increase in prices. In order to acquaint myself with this condition I decided to make a trip in the month of March of this year to the West Indies and South America, where the crops have suffered most of all the countries where cocoa is raised, and I found that the statements which had been sent out were not only correct, as to the poor condition of the crops, but I found it even worse than I anticipated, and if it had not been that within the last ten or twelve years the cocoa plant had been introduced in Africa, and that these crops had been constantly increasing until to-day they yield from 5 to 600,000 bags per annum, we would have to pay now from thirty to forty cents per pound for cocoa beans, and it is only the increase in that enormous crop continuing year after year that has kept prices down; as the West Indian crops in Martinique, Hayti, San Domingo, Grenada, the Island of Trinidad and in Venezuela have for two years not yielded more than forty per cent. of an average crop, and the shortage in that time has amounted to over one million bags.

Last June and July the cocoa growers in Africa who make most of their shipments to Lisbon, recognized the fact that there was going to be a large shortage, and they at once commenced to hold back their crop and started to ask higher prices for their cocoa. They have gradually found that they have been right, and that the shortage has been so great that gradually they realized more and more for their goods, as they found out that there was not enough cocoa to go around, and that they could get any price they asked for their cocoa.

A condition of this kind is not a speculative one. It is only the result of the natural laws of demand and supply, and nothing else. In order to acquaint myself with what effect the higher prices of cocoa were having with the trade, I decided to take a trip from Boston to Colorado and visit most of the large manufacturers and ascertain whether the consumption of chocolate at the advanced prices had been reduced. I found that every one of them was having an increase from twenty to forty per cent. since the first of January of this year in the sale of their chocolate confections, and in fact a larger increase in that particular part of their industry than in any other. Therefore we cannot expect lower prices as long as these conditions continue.

I would like further to state that in order to convince you of my statement, the amount of cocoa beans to-day in the different centres of Europe, such as Havre, Hamburg, Lisbon and London, is not now sufficient to carry the wants of the world at large with the present consumption for more than ninety days. In London, which is one of the large markets of the world, it is claimed, that there is not more than a seven weeks' supply for England. Here in New York we have only 11,000 bags of cocoa available in first hands, where we ought to have double as much. Last year at this time many of the chocolate manufacturers carried at least from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent. of their requirements or what they would want from now until the end of the year, whereas to-day there is not an average of more than fifteen per cent. in the hands of these same manufacturers.

Mr. des Gordian takes issue as follows:—

You think and say that this condition is only the result of the natural laws of demand and supply. It is quite right that the prices prevailing in 1905 and in the first part of 1906 were so low as to command higher prices, for those prices, also made by the speculators, did not pay the costs of production. We often said in our special review, the "Gordian," that a price of 13 cents per pound c. i. f. in bond for Thome, Bahia, Accra and Samana Sanchez cocoa is to be considered as one doing justice to both the manufacturers and the planters, but we cannot consent to a price level of 17⅓ to 19½ cents per pound for these middle class cocoas when the prices for the finer and finest grades but slightly differ from this quotation. Now, there was a day that made it clear to the bears that they could not go further any more, feeling that the planters were out of patience. For a business man it is not so very difficult to perceive the tricks of the speculators, who, at first, being bears, developed into bulls. How much we are indebted to the speculators for the present unhealthy situation may also be proved by the following facts, viz.:

"You are positive on the point that the consumption of cocoa has in five years increased by fully 100 per cent. Very well, but we tell you that there has been an increase of only 27 per cent. exactly. And why? Because the world's consumption has increased from 269,000,000 pounds in 1902 to 342,000,000 pounds in 1906, or 73,000,000 pounds, or 27 per cent. On the other hand, there has been in the United States of America an increase in the same period from 51,000,000 pounds to 83,000,000 pounds. That is an increase of about 60 per cent. And if we look into the statistical reports of the Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, which have always proved as being the most valuable ones, we find an increase of only 7¾ per cent. in 1906. It is true that the statements of private persons differ from the official ones, but we made some strange experiences with these private sources and prefer to rely, ourselves, on official statistics."

Concerning Mr. Runkel's reference to two successive crop failures, he is wrong, as there was but the failure of the Trinidad crop last year. The arrivals of Havre, New York, Hamburg and London, they show by statistics to have been heavier than ever. Only the United States has until now shown any important increase in consumption, taking the entire quantity imported into this country. Of this quantity it is doubtful as to what has been manufactured and how much has been warehoused.

You attribute the increase of consumption principally to the increase of confectionery, but you will surely admit that but little chocolate, in comparison, is used for confectionery purposes. Therefore raw cocoa has not so much to do with confectionery, and the position you give the raw cocoa in the confectionery trade seems to us to be somewhat exaggerated. Moreover, the world's consumption cannot be judged by the increase or decrease in America, because Europe's consumption is three or four times as large as the consumption in the United States of America. Now, it is certain that the European countries do not consume so much cocoa as before. In England, Spain and Belgium there is even a decrease, according to official statistics.

It is true that the stocks are smaller than formerly, but only at Havre and in London, which means the visible stocks. As everybody knows, the trade has removed from London and Havre to Hamburg and New York, where the stocks are invisible for want of the official statistics.

We cannot believe that you will still insist upon your opinion that the to-day's situation is due to the natural laws of demand and supply, when carefully going into the matter and examining it thoroughly.

For all these reasons we sincerely trust that you will change your mind and blame the speculators, no matter if bulls or bears, for the present standing and situation of the cocoa market.

Enormous Increase in Home Rice Production.

Rice production in this country and the acreage allotted to the crop has in recent years undergone an enormous increase. Only 161,312 acres were grown in 1889 and 342,214 acres in 1899, while the area devoted to the crop in 1905 was 482,479 acres and the total production for the year amounted to 13,606,989 bushels. The first rice was grown in the United States about the middle of the seventeenth century, and the crop was introduced into South Carolina toward its close. For years our rice culture was limited to certain sections along the South Atlantic coast, until within recent years some of the prairie lands of Louisiana and Texas were opened up to the culture of the crop. During the last four or five years a good beginning in rice culture has also been made in Arkansas, with results indicating the possibility of widely extending the area of profitable rice culture on lands not hitherto considered adapted to this crop.

New York Jobbers Want Food Guarantees Given General Acceptance. More Discussion Over Subsidizing Salesmen. Big Biscuit Company Failure. Small Items of Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 6, 1907.

Pursuant to the policy agreed upon at their meeting last week, the members of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association will now endeavor to have the food guarantee given under the Federal law accepted for all purposes. The problem that confronts them is caused by some diversity in the State laws of several States, especially Pennsylvania. The jobbers say that it is not practicable to give different kinds of guarantees on the same kind of food shipped to various States. They hope to have affairs so adjusted that the Federal guarantee will answer everywhere.

The general plan of the jobber is to get for himself the guarantee of the manufacturer so that he is then protected in passing along such guarantee to the retailers. The retailers here are asking for guarantees on all invoices so that they are protected on all articles, including those that have the serial numbers and those that have not.

It is anticipated, however, that in States where the statutes make requirements at variance with those of the Federal law, the retailers will naturally ask for a guarantee to protect them equally in case of a prosecution under the State or under the Federal law. It is this kind of a guarantee that the jobber wishes to avoid, and it is stated that some manufacturers are not willing to take this additional responsibility. As to the products which the jobbers themselves pack, they feel the same as other manufacturers.

The attorneys for the association will endeavor to have the questions settled with the authorities of the States concerned, so as to have the Federal guarantee uniformly acceptable, for it is recognized that retail dealers are everywhere quite determined not to assume the responsibility under either Federal or State laws for food prepared and packed by others.

The subject is to be further considered at a meeting to be held in Chicago, September 20th, by the Executive Committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, at which a report will be submitted on the conclusions reached at the New York meeting.

Retailers will hear with interest, if not amusement, that the jobbers at their recent conferences have continued the discussion of the evil of subsidizing salesmen, and there is to be more consideration of the subject by the National Association, it being realized that local action is futile. This is regarded by many as one of the cases in which the jobbers must begin by setting their own house in order, but they have not at present the means for doing so.

The difficulty is deep-seated in the methods of the business, it is believed. Within a day or two after the last conference, when the subject was discussed, the individual jobbing houses sent out their usual instructions to salesmen, directing them to push this, that or another brand, and, in some instances, offering a special bonus to the salesmen for unloading the goods mentioned in such letters. Now, this is not the same as a manufacturer giving a bonus to the salesmen who work for jobbers, but it is an easy step from one practice to another, and the jobbers know it.

Sometimes the buyer for the jobber gets the bonus, or the jobbing house gets it in the form of a special price, and then the salesman may not work so hard as when the inducement reaches him. The extra money that the salesman gets comes either directly or indirectly from the manufacturers, he knows, and it is not surprising that he quite often fails to appreciate the distinction which the jobbers try to make between the two methods. Then the salesman is likely to feel that he will get a larger percentage if he deals directly with the manufacturer than if the bonus first passes through the hands of the jobber's buyer.

So, while the subsidizing is evil and, perhaps, in violation of law, yet it seems likely to go on secretly, as in the past, for some time to come, or until a change is made in the methods which the jobbers themselves follow in pushing sales.

The New York Retail Grocers' Union will give its twenty-sixth annual picnic Sunday in Schuetzen Park, Union Hill, N. J. The association has the reputation of having rousing good times at all its social affairs, so that there is never any trouble about getting a large attendance. Money-making is not thought of in planning the entertainments of the union, and significant of this is the fact that after giving successful affairs of all kinds for years, the organization has only a modest sum in its treasury—just sufficient for comfort, while other organizations under similar circumstances have accumulated quite large accounts in their banks. Upward of forty manufacturing companies have contributed prizes for bowling, shooting and other contests.

Higher wages having been demanded by the Truckmen's Union a meeting was held yesterday by the Wholesale Grocers' Protective Association, which was formed to look after labor matters of this kind in behalf of the jobbers. The drivers obtained an advance quite generally a year ago. The jobbers did not take any definite action on the present demand, it is understood, and it is likely that a conference will be held with a committee of the truckmen. It is not expected that there will be a strike.

About sixty managers of plants were present at the annual meeting which was held in the Hotel Breslin Tuesday and Wednesday by the Crackers Manufacturers Co. The organization comprises about one hundred independent concerns which have factories in different parts of the country. It is understood that the proceedings, which were not of a public character, had to do with questions as to cost of material, prices, freight rates and competition. The new officers chosen at this meeting are: President, C. R. Boss, New London, Conn.; vice-president, T. G. Robinson, Cleveland, Ohio; treasurer, J. G. McClurg, Pittsburg, Pa.; secretary, H. B. Grubbs, New York. The directors include Eugene Ivins, Philadelphia; Edward Graves, Washington, D. C.; W. D. Morris, Chicago; Wm. Deininger, Rochester, N. Y.; W. H. Collins, Buffalo, N. Y.; Albert P. A bankruptcy petition was filed yesterday against the Manhattan Biscuit Co., manufacturers of crackers and biscuits, at 392 Greenwich street, this action on the part of creditors following an assignment which the company made last Saturday. The liabilities are estimated at $65,000 and the value of the assets is placed at $100,000, this total including $80,000 as the valuation of the manufacturing plant. The company's statement made in January showed assets of $195,000 and liabilities of $50,000. Frederick W. Brooker, the president, said after the assignment was made, that in his opinion the assets will amount to $150,000. The tight money market is said to have precipitated the trouble.

The company was incorporated in 1899, with a capital stock of $250,000, of which $130,000 was paid in and the remainder, it is said, comprised the good will of two Philadelphia baking companies. The factory and site are said to have cost $100,000. Besides President Brooker, the officers included W. H. Becker, secretary. The company had agencies in New Jersey, Maryland, Georgia, North Carolina, Florida and Porto Rico.

According to the statements of the officers, business has been sufficiently brisk, but the increased cost of raw materials and the withdrawal of credit by banks during the stringency of recent weeks, caused the failure. Most of the accounts due the company have been assigned to banks.

This is the second of the so-called independent cracker companies of this city that has failed in three months.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

IX.—Are You a Real Salesman.

Are you a salesman, or just filling the place of one?

Be it known that a great many people who claim they are salesmen have none of the qualifications for such a position, and some of them cannot be even classed as high as an "order taker." The "order taker" books what business he can find at the regular prices, but the man who grades lower than the "order taker" is the one who is always cutting prices.

He gets business. His order book will show that, but at what profit to his house? Many such men are absolutely unable to show any net profit to their house, and under such circumstances they are worse than useless to that house.

The man who depends on cutting prices to sell goods admits that he is no salesman. If he was a salesman he could sell the goods at the same price the customer had been paying for them. A lower price than a competitor on the same goods is not only an admission that the man making the cut is a poor salesman, but that his house is a back number for employing him.

An order taken from a retailer without profit does not bring you his future business unless you continue the unprofitable tactics. He merely makes it a point to use you to beat down prices. If the cut on one article on the order is made up by increasing the price of another, he will eventually find you out, and then you are worse off than before. If you are going to be a salesman, make them show you the price the other man made, and do not go below that figure in booking the order.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

A perfect blend of superfine coffee. For the very finest trade.

Wiley and other yellow sensationalists of the same school have done their best to make us feel that the bulk of our food was poisoned by adulteration, but now comes Dr. Woods Hutchinson, who in September "McClure's," points out that many of our favorite foods are poison naturally.

Poison Foods.

The comforting title of Dr. Hutchinson's article is "Poison Foods" and he makes the following contentions:—

That potatoes are poisonous under certain conditions.

That beans contain an aromatic oil and a bitter alkaloid, both of which are poisonous.

That peas cause burning of the stomach, flatulence and loss of appetite.

That cheese irritates the stomach, upsets digestion and constipates the bowels.

That nuts contain a substance which is a decided irritant to the digestive canal.

That bananas are dangerous.

That strawberries, cherries, raspberries, prunes, melons, grape fruit, oranges, apricots, peaches, plums and apples are all more or less bad in the order named.

Among the products here mentioned are some which the best authorities have always declared were veritable staves of life. Nuts and apples for instance. What, forsooth, can we eat with the realization of perfect safety? Meat is bitterly condemned by a large and rapidly growing contingent, bread made from white flour has many enemies, and everywhere one turns to partake of this or that he finds a warning hand upheld.

Truly after reading modern food literature, the "Stroller's" despairing suggestion that we may be obliged to return to the maternal sustenance of our infancy takes on the aspect of wise prophecy.

Reducing Expenses.

The members of the Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Association are talking about abolishing solicitors and getting their orders in by telephone or asking customers to come to the store, which in many cases they would have to do if nobody called for their orders.

This may be a very good plan indeed. Any plan is good which promises to reduce expenses without impairing the efficiency of the business. There is one thing to be said, however—that the chance of this plan's success is quite remote, owing to the great difficulty of securing absolute unanimity of action. One grocer in a community or a neighborhood who sent out for orders could weaken if not entirely upset a plan like this.

It may not be amiss, either, to suggest that reduction of expenses may go too far. Witness the experience of the amateur agricultural scientist, who invented a way to support his mule without eating. The plan worked splendidly. Day by day the mule got through with less and less until at the precise moment when the farmer was on the verge of complete success, i. e., keeping the mule on no food whatever, the contrary beast heartlessly died.

The Core of the Question.

Regarding the use of benzoate of soda as a food preservative, which is one of the most mooted food questions of the day, the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department, through its latest monthly bulletin, makes the following observation:—

It is said that the Federal authorities have determined to allow the use of benzoate of soda in this year's crop, but that they will not permit it to be sold under a guarantee bearing a serial number. But if benzoate of soda is really injurious to the human body, why allow its use until January 1st? Why not prohibit it now, before the year's crop is put up? If it is not injurious, why not allow its indefinite use in quantities of one-tenth of 1 per cent.? But if it is a harmful substance, why temporize and put off the inevitable until January 1st, or any other period in the future?

The harmfulness or harmlessness of benzoate is indeed the core of the entire matter. If it is harmful the Federal authorities not only lack all worthy reason to continue its use, but they also lack all manner of legal right to do so. If it is not harmful, its use cannot be interfered with, fraud being absent, and all laws seeking to interfere with it are invalid.

This question ought to be decided. Dr. Wiley and his subordinates are simply trifling over it and have been from the beginning. In their hearts they know that benzoate of soda cannot be proven harmful in customary quantities. If they do know it, it is dishonest to assume to know the contrary and contemptible to keep five thousand men on the anxious bench for a year. If it can be conceived that they really know the contrary, then it is unfair and against the law to temporize. The question ought to be settled and settled at once.

Mr. E. J. Buckley,

927 Arch Street.

Dear Sir:-

Enclosed you will please find my check for $3. for the renewal of the Grocery World for another year as I think one of the best and economical purchases in the Grocery business is the Grocery World.

Yours respectfully,

Manager Grocery Dept.

Currant Market Strong on Other Side.

The general course of the currant market on the other side during the past six months has been remarkably steady, and in consequence of the comparatively small crop shippers have shown no inclination to operate except at full market value. Prices which at the beginning of the season opened at about 15s. 6d. (shilling = 24½ cents; penny = 2 cents) per hundredweight for Provincial fruit, rapidly advanced to about 23s. per hundredweight, cost and freight New York. In spite of the higher prices ruling, the demand has been greater than in previous seasons, and shipments to the United States up to June 30th totaled about 14,700 tons, against 13,700 up to the same period in 1906. Practically no old crop fruit is now available for shipment, except that held by the Privileged Company, and this fruit can only be exported at the fixed minimum price of 200 drachmas (5½ drachmas = $1) per 1,000 Venetian pounds, which is equal to about 21s. 9d. per hundredweight packed in barrels and cost and freight New York.

Swiss Milk Chocolate Advances.

Foreign Manufacturers Meet and Put Up Prices Twenty-five per Cent. on Account of High Cocoa Beans. May and May Not Affect American Trade. One Large Concern to Establish a Factory Here.

American chocolate manufacturers will welcome the news that practically all the foreign manufacturers of Swiss chocolate and cocoa have already, or are about to, advance their prices about 25 per cent. If this advance is extended to this country, and it is not seen how it can be avoided, he result is bound to be a sharp lecline in the sale of Swiss milk hocolate on this side.

The cause assigned for the advance abroad is the continued very igh prices of cocoa beans, some eference to which is made in nother column. All grades of Swiss cocoa and chocolate are ffected.

There is some ground for the heory that American prices for Swiss milk chocolate may not advance. One of the largest manufacturers of these goods, whose hocolates have been imported in ery large quantities into the United States, is about to establish a factory in New England, hus escaping the duty. It is believed that several other Swiss oncerns who also have a share of he American market will be compelled to hold their prices down in rder to meet the competition.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Hake.

A fish of the cod family, sometimes called herring hake or stock-fish.

It is a coarse quality, of whitish color, with gray on the back. Mostly caught by line on the Atlantic coasts at the North of Europe and off Nova Scotia.

Hakes are two to four feet long, with broad flat head, the mouth very wide, and the lower jaw extending beyond the upper. Of its two dorsal fins, the first is small and triangular, while the other extends to half the length of its body, and its anal fin (of same shape and size) is exactly opposite.

The hake is very voracious, feeding chiefly on herring and pilchards.

Its flesh is somewhat coarse, and is not much esteemed; but it is always cheap, and large quantities are salted and dried.

Halibut.

The largest species of the flounder or flat-fish family, measuring three to six feet long, and weighing up to 100 pounds, 200 pounds, and even 500 pounds each.

Its two eyes are both on the right side of its head. Mostly caught by hook and line off Greenland, Norway, Scotland and similar northern latitudes.

After being caught they are often kept alive six or eight weeks by being packed in large perforated boxes, which are sunk or floated in a dock or other shallow water.

Usually sold wholesale by the stone, price 5 to 10 shillings.

The flesh is white and firm, but rather dry and coarse; the fins and flaps, however, are considered tender and delicate.

Besides being cooked and eaten fresh, it is salted, dried and smoked. Halibut is also often sliced up and pickled in barrels.

Herring.

The herring is the commonest and most important class of fish that visits our shores. The word herring is derived from the Dutch word "herr," an army. It is essentially a northern fish and is found in the highest latitudes.

Herrings are marketed and treated in a variety of forms.

Pittsburg Grocers and Produce Jobbers in Sharp Fight

Suit Begun Which Has Association's Support, Charging Produce Men with Maintaining an Illegal Restraining Combination. Cases Where All Members of Produce Association Refused to Sell Retailer Until He Paid Bill Which He Considered Unjust.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 5, 1907.

There is a heavy war on in the city of Pittsburg, Pa., between the Pittsburg Retail Grocers' Association and the Wholesale Produce Association. The latter concern has just been made the defendant in an action brought by W. H. Arbour, a retailer. This suit is sympathized with and morally backed by the Retailers' Association. Mr. Arbour was placed on the delinquent list for a small amount which he claimed he had paid.

In his action, which was promptly begun by Mr. Arbour after all the members of the Produce Association refused to sell him until he had paid the bill he claimed was unjust, he claimed that the association was an illegal combination in restraint of trade. Later on he filed an amended complaint, in which it is claimed that the association is in restraint of trade in using a "black list" against certain dealers in retail produce.

The amended bill gives the detailed list of the wholesale firms and individuals composing the defendant association, and attached is given the by-laws and rules of the association by which the plaintiffs expect to prove the association is performing illegal acts by using a "black list." This is alleged to be shown by Section 6 of Article XIV of the by-laws, which reads:—

> All members are held bound that they or their firm shall refuse to sell on credit or for spot cash to any person or firm reported as a debtor until duly notified by the secretary that such party's name has been removed from the list. The penalty for each violation shall be the same as sections 2 and 3 of this article.

In the bill are given a number of alleged instances where retail dealers who had paid their bills had been reported and their names put on the black list and interfered with in their business by denial of the right by association members to sell them goods. Bills that had been paid, it is alleged, have been reported as unpaid.

It is averred that the by-laws of the association are illegal for the reason that they are in violation of the order of Court granting the charter that its objects were lawful and not injurious to the public. It is held that the regulations of the association are in violation of laws of the State and the United States and of the Constitutions of both State and nation. It is also averred that the right of freedom of contracts is violated. A permanent injunction is sought and the court is asked to hear testimony as to damages sustained by the defendant and his fellow dealers on account of the acts of several members of the association.

Among the affidavits attached to the complaint is one made by A. F. Bacon, of McKeesport, a produce jobber. Bacon says he once bought produce to the amount of about $1,500 weekly in Pittsburg, but is unable to buy any there at present. He says that on March 6, 1905, he bought a car of apples from John C. Blume & Co. which were frozen when delivered. He refused to accept or pay for them and was placed on the delinquent list. The bill was $344.50. The matter was referred to the association and it decided Bacon was entitled to a credit of $50, and he was compelled to pay Blume & Co. $294.50, which he paid, so that his name could be taken from the list to enable him to do business. The transaction, Mr. Bacon claims, was interstate business, as the apples were loaded at Albion, N. Y., and shipped direct to McKeesport. Bacon also swears that on May 1, 1907, Culver & Co., also members of the association, refused to fill an order for eggs because of the rules of the association. A little later he went to the Pennsylvania Railroad produce yard to try to buy fruit and vegetables, but on all occasions various commission merchants belonging to the Produce Association advised other parties not to sell to him, saying he was indebted to some member of the association.

As published several weeks ago, this litigation promises to be interesting, as the Government is interesting itself in it.

Pink Salmon Coming Forward.

High Price of Other Salmon Stimulates Business in the Second Grade of Alaska Fish.

One very noticeable result of the high salmon prices, which have ruled for some time, and seem likely to rule for some months more, is the increasing demand for the grade of Alaska salmon known as pink salmon.

Pink salmon is the grade next below red Alaska, chums coming last. Both pinks and chums have formerly been largely sold in the South to the poorer trade. Only since prices of other grades became so high has it made its appearance in the North to any extent. Now all Northern jobbers report a decided increase in the demand for it. Retailers are offering it from 1 to 2 cents below the price of red salmon.

The pink grade costs delivered in the East in a large way, around $1 per dozen, at which red Alaska has very often sold.

State Seems Almost Clean.

Monthly Bulletin Dated August 15th Reports Only One Case of Adulteration. Summary of the Month's Work

The monthly bulletin of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department for the month ending August 15, 1907, is at hand, and shows fewer reports of impure goods than any bulletin previously issued.

Two editorial observations which appear in this number of the bulletin are worthy of reproduction:—

> The State of Pennsylvania now has a very efficient law regulating the traffic in food. With the active co-operation and sympathy of manufacturers and dealers it is believed the Pure Food Division will be able to prevent the sale of adulterated or poisonous articles of food. How many lives have already been saved by the legislation now in force nobody will ever be able to tell. But it is clear that there has been a great improvement in the quality of the food offered for sale to the people of Pennsylvania.
> It should be apparent to all who give the matter the least attention that the pure food laws need to be supplemented by a properly framed act regulating the sale of alcoholic and non-alcoholic drinks within the Commonwealth. It is quite as important that the people have pure drinks as that they have pure food. The quantity of drink consumed in this State in the course of a year, and especially during the summer months, is simply enormous. To poison the consumer by adulterating his drink is quite as serious an offense against the health of the individual and the happiness of the family as to vend poisoned food.

> The most cleanly disposed grocer may not be able to drive the flies entirely out of his establishment, and he certainly can't keep them from buzzing about the vegetables, fruits and berries he displays in front of his store. But he can keep these articles covered with netting in such a way as to prevent the flies covering them. Many a grocer loses important sales by carelessness in this respect. A goodly proportion of housekeepers will not buy goods which have been covered with flies for hours. The fly is an unclean insect and a disease-carrying one. For that reason it is highly dangerous.

A summary of the month is as follows:—

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Fancy Grocery Display.

Window dressing, in the writer's opinion, is one of the most important branches of the grocery business.

It is an art, which demands and deserves all the energy that can be enthused into it.

The window display extends the invitation to the observer to step inside.

How to make the display which will give the best results is the subject for consideration.

Different classes of trade demand different styles of display. Some neat and attractive, some quiet and conservative, some of a sensational order.

I will endeavor to demonstrate the value of each class in different styles.

This week we will have a show of fancy groceries; some of the tempting things which have built up the high-class business.

My style this week is one which I have reaped wonderful results from. A slanting show at an angle of 45 degrees, showing the goods in sections, running towards the window.

Each section is relieved by a strip 2 by 3 inches, stained and varnished, thus giving an individuality.

Such goods as brandied fruits, French prunes in jars, olives, sardines, Wiesbaden prunes, washed figs in baskets and jars, sweet pickles, etc., etc., may be used. Do not have too large a variety.

Cover your boards with nice white demy paper; silks and velveteen, frills and crepe paper may be used in another form, but not in this.

Run your sections of as fair a width as space will afford, and you will hear your display talk to the observer, and who can resist the tempting invitation.

Once inside the store your object has been attained and it remains with you to sell a big bill of goods from the more generous variety and display which you have not room to show in your window.

Always have a little corner near the door for the tempting bait, such as a tray of ginger cakes or pretzels in generous form. This will catch man, woman or child, and who cannot recall the customers made through mamma's desire to please the children.

Inside, at the rear of your display, run a counter, at the ends of which you may make a pyramid of jellies and preserves.

How tempting they look! You hear it remarked and feel proud of it.

Have a nice variety of handy package dainties on this counter, for your customer will invariably hang around the door as though she hates to leave the good things and will carry this or that along with her.

Don't forget your signs. The writer has seen more of the sold by the dozen and half dozen than you can credit; don't be afraid of quoting dozens, there are lots of people who will buy this quantity as readily as a smaller one; you won't lose the small sales either.

The best drawing card I ever saw was a show during the season of finest washed figs.

A generous show, with a fresh basket opened daily.

I have seen most remarkable results from this method of display and hope to give another in some future issue.

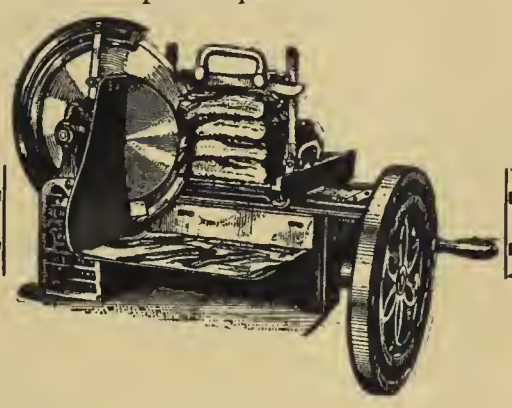
GOSSIP

Saw an article in a trade-paper the other day on "Women's Gossip as a Trade-getter."

The man who wrote it knew his business. The things which the women have to say about a store will make or break it.

There was one sentence in the article that hit the nail on the head: "If a butcher (or grocer) could get an unlimited quantity of favorable gossip about his meat he would need no other advertising to make his business a success."

We couldn't possibly give you a better idea of the trade-bringing power of the American Slicing Machine than is afforded by this involuntary tribute from the expert in question.



The American Slicing Machine will start all the women in your neighborhood to talking about the advantages of trading at your store.

Why?

Because you are giving them better-looking, better-cooking, better-tasting sliced meat and more slices for the same money.

You're making a better profit on each sale.

You can get the machine, if you desire, with practically no investment whatever.

Write us about it, now.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking f the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Departmen and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tri several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribe probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of w dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing windo displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily n or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully a perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangeme should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black i (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The week's business in tea has been very fair. The entire line seems to be in healthy condition, and the comparative scarcity of many lines has led to a more active demand. There has been no change in prices during the past week, but prices are steady to strong, and the market throughout in healthy condition.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has ruled somewhat higher during the past week, due, however, entirely to support from the syndicate. The speculative public has shown no disposition to come in, and it would be impossible to force the market up except through continued support by those representing large interests. The buying trade continue to follow the hand-to-mouth policy which they adopted last spring, and dealers in actual coffee are also working very cautiously. Actual Rio and Santos coffee has advanced about ⅛ cent during the week. Mild coffees are in very good position. Bogotas, especially, being firm and advancing, on account of light stocks and light receipts. Java and Mocha are steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The market on New Orleans refined sugar has advanced 10 points during the week and the refiners throughout this section have also advanced confectioners' sugar 10 points. The present market shows a rather small margin between raw and refined, and an advance in refined seems probable for several reasons. First, the European raw market about 20 points higher than o own, owing to unfavorable cr prospects. The Cuban outlook also poor, and sugar crops w be late even if normally lar The second reason is that t largest demand of the year refined sugar is now on. It w not be equal to last year, but w probably be large enough to ba an advance upon.

Syrup and Molasses.

The market for corn is exce ingly high, being 13 cents bushel above last year, and t condition has been responsible another advance in glucose o points and a corresponding vance in compound syrup of cent per gallon. The dema stimulated the demand for mi syrup to some extent, but weather has been against it, a the business is light. Su syrup is in good demand export, but light demand domestic trade. Prices are changed. Molasses is unchang New crop prospects are excell The spot demand is light.

Fish.

The feature of the fish mar has been an active demand mackerel. The shore catch been fair, and prices are changed. The receipts of su mer Norways are about over; uation about unchanged. catch of Irish fish has been and the receipts in this coun liberal up to date. Prices not materially different from year, and show no change for week. Cod, hake and hadd are very dull on spot and rule unchanged prices. Some b ness is still doing in futures aintained high prices. Domes- c and imported sardines are both eady and unchanged and in oderate demand. Considerable usiness has been done in sock- e and Alaska salmon at the rices named last week. Some uyers who bought subject to pproval of price have not yet nfirmed, however, while on the her hand some packers have not t confirmed all the orders ken.

Canned Goods.

The tomato situation is about nchanged, but if anything, ows a slightly firmer feeling. pot goods of old pack are quoted 87½ cents delivered. New ck are scarce at a quotation of cents f. o. b. The general de- and for tomatoes is fair, and the tuation healthy, but somewhat certain. Much depends on the eather for the next few weeks, it can make all the difference tween a short pack and a good e. Spot stocks are light. Corn moving moderately, but the neral situation is dull. Pros- cts for a large pack are not so ight as they were. Prices for e week show no change. Peas e still in fair demand, with the arket still firm. Some Wiscon- n peas offered in the East dur- g the week were eagerly snap- d up at 10 to 15 cents above e price of futures. Peaches are nchanged, being still very high erywhere. The price of raw aterial in all factory sections is ceedingly high. It is reported at the supply of peaches packed California this year will be mewhat larger than was ex- cted. Lemon clings, however, e scarce. Apples are firm. obody will sell futures, and the west spot prices on gallons is .25. The general small Balti- ore line is unchanged and in ght demand. California canned oods in the same position.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are slow. There is a lit- e spot demand, but not much. utures are still strong, and an ad- nce in them is by no means im- ssible. Peaches are dull at nchanged prices. Currants are rong on spot, and have ad- nced ¼ cent. This, however, merely a local and temporary ndition, and will soon cure self. Apricots are unchanged d selling readily. Raisins are ill firm, though in light request. The trade are still working on the Australian raisins mentioned some weeks ago. Apples are firm and scarce. Citron has advanced 1 cent per pound, owing to damage to the crop and light stocks abroad. The price, though high, is still somewhat below last year.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show further advance, and are now quoted in a large way at $1.95. Damage to the growing crop and light offerings are the causes. Marrows range from $2.10 to $2.20, having advanced more in sympathy with pea beans than for any other reason. California limas are unchanged and in moderate demand. Split peas are unchanged and in good demand. Other grades are unchanged and firm. There has been an unusually good demand for dried peas all summer.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at the recent advance. The make continues about normal and the quality is running good. The consumptive demand for butter is active and some dealers have withdrawn some fancy butter from storage in order to supply the demand. Present conditions are likely to exist as long as the weather continues warm. After the cool weather comes there will likely be an increased demand and slightly higher prices. This applies to prints as well as solids. Under grade creameries are equally firm with the higher grades.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm at the recent advance. There is a large consumptive demand and considerable withdrawals from storehouses. The quality of the receipts is improving. Altogether there is likely to be a stationary market with unchanged prices for a few days, though at this season the market is always very uncertain.

Cheese.

The cheese market at all country points has advanced another ¼ cent, and is now firm. The make of cheese is lighter than it has been for several years, owing to extreme dry weather in the cheese producing sections. The high prices have not as yet interfered with consumption, and it is probable that before September is gone there will be still further ad-

PURE LARD

Gives satisfaction to the consumer, and, therefore, reflects credit on the dealer selling it.

In order to give the very best satisfaction to all concerned it should not only be pure, but should contain all the original, natural oils.

Many brands are "pure," but do not contain these rich oils, as the manufacturer extracted them to increase his profits. This leaves but a residue, white, sweet, pure perhaps, or at least unadulterated, but correspondingly "poor," because it lacks richness.

Such lard can be purchased for less money than

but the consumer will require a larger quantity to do the same amount of work, consequently it costs more in the end and fails to give the necessary satisfaction.

Sell your customers Burk's Lard, which is to be strictly pure, to contain nothing but what results from the rendering of good, wholesome hog fat and to contain all its original properties, none of which have been extracted.

This bond is deposited with the Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia.

vances. The quality of the present arrivals is very good. Part skims are bringing within 2 to 3 cents of the better grades. The demand consumes everything as fast as it arrives.

Provisions.

The market for all smoked meats is dull. There has been some falling off in the consumptive demand, as is usual at this season, and as the demand declines still further prices will probably ease off also. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ¼ cent, due entirely to increased demand. Compound lard is unchanged, but firm and active. Barrel pork is steady at unchanged prices. Dried beef shows a further advance of 1 cent per pound.

Produce.

White potatoes, 30 to 35 cents per basket, good demand; cabbage, 10 to 15 cents per basket, $1.25 to $2.50 per 100, fair demand; Savoy, 50 cents per barrel, demand poor; squash, 10 to 15 cents per basket, poor demand; cucumbers, 25 cents to $1.25 per basket, demand good; turnips, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand fair; string beans, green and wax, 30 to 50 cents per basket, demand good; carrots, 40 to 50 cents, demand fair; egg plants, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand good; peppers, 15 to 20 cents per basket, demand good; lima beans, improved, 75 to 85 cents per basket; flat, 40 to 50; shelled, 11 to 14 cents per quart, demand good; yellow onions, 60 cents per basket; white, 60 to 65 cents per basket; pickling, white, 75 cents per basket; Spanish, 70 cents to $1, demand slow; beets, $1.50 to $2 per 100, demand fair; radishes, $1.50 per 100, demand fair; spinach, $2 per barrel, demand fair to good; celery, York State, 25 to 50 cents per bunch, fair to good demand; corn, $1.10 to $1.25 per 100, fair demand; salad, $2 per crate of three dozen; Pennsylvania, $1 per barrel, fair to good demand.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25; 7-hands, 65 to 90 cents; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents; red, 50 cents to $2 per bunch, demand poor; California oranges, $4.25 to $5 per box, fair to good demand; pineapples, $5 to $5.50 per box, demand poor; lemons, $2 to $4 per box, demand poor; limes, 80 cents to $1 per 100, demand poor.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; large jumbo, $1.65 per bushel; green peanuts, choice, 5¾ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; large jumbo, 8 cents, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, Marbots, 12½ cents per pound; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand slow.

MARKET NOTES.

There is little change in the peach situation. The best are now coming from New Jersey and range from $2 to $2.50. Ordinary grades range from $1 to $1.50 per basket. Very few peaches are coming from Delaware, barely two cars a day, as against thirty to forty cars last year at the same time.

Tomatoes are a little higher, owing to falling off in receipts. The canners have paid as high as 28 cents during the week, and the general jobbing price is from 25 to 40 cents, with 50 to 60 cents gotten for some extra fancy.

The quality of the cantaloupes on the market is extremely uncertain. Most of the supply is from near-by points and range from 10 cents to $1 per basket. A few Colorado Rocky Fords are averaging $3.50 and are wanted.

Near-by sweet potatoes are commanding 75 to 80 cents per basket. Southern potatoes range from $2.50 to $3 per barrel, and the demand is good.

California grapes have declined from 50 to 75 cents per box. They have been ranging from $2 to $2.75, which is too high. The demand is fair.

Moore's early grapes from Delaware and Maryland are coming in now and now range from $1 to $1.25. They were as low as 75 cents. A few Concords are also in and average $1.

Corn is about unchanged from last week—50 to 60 cents per basket. The demand is good and so is the quality.

AMONG THE TRADE.

A letter from the Spanish olive growing district received by a local olive handler during the week states that a good average crop of Queens and Manzanillo is expected this year. Unfavorable weather conditions, however, may reduce the size. Olives in this country are a little cheaper than they were, owing to cuts made by two large handlers.

Barley has advanced 50 cents during the past few days, and coarse barley is now quoted at $3.50 in a large way. Scarcity of good stock is the cause.

All prices on rolled oats have been withdrawn. The last quotation was $6.25, and no new price is expected until September 15th. The situation is very strong. All markets are nearly bare.

Slices Everything from 6-pound Knuckles to half-ounce Ends.

Johnson, the Retail Grocer

Retails for cash over 300 pounds of sliced dried beef a week and about twice this amount of sugar—sugar, clear, bright, sweet and sparklingly beautiful, and yet this sugar adds nothing to Johnson's prestige or profit. Why? Because 96 competitors retail sugar just as nice and quite as cheap and give credit besides.

Johnson Builds the Famous Patented Eversharp Slicing Machine

Which slices dried beef to perfection, each slice full size, transparently thin and so smooth it shines like a polished mirror. Wafer slices so invitingly handsome, so moist, soft and juicy, and such delicious eating. They command 36 cents a pound and show a pleasing profit of more than 45 dollars a week. While every slice eaten adds to Johnson's popularity and prosperity.

Johnson rents out four Eversharp machines in New Brunswick and allows no more. Is the financial intuition of a Rockefeller required to choose between conducting the dried beef business on the old style, free for all, profitless sugar selling system or a more pleasant business, enormously enlarged, with the number of Eversharp slicing machines in a city limited to a few plucky, enterprising up-to-date grocers? Send for a sample of sandwich sliced beef, and you'll decide to cut out all competition by installing a patent-protected Eversharp slicer.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

his Department is devoted to the criticism advertising matter sent in, to the devising new advertising ideas for special occasions, n request, and to the suggesting of original ertisements when data is supplied. All amunications sent in for this Department uld be addressed to the Editor of Science Advertising. They will be filed in their er and taken up according to strict rotation

A correspondent sends me in a pped newspaper advertisement, t his own, I believe, and asks e what I think of it. Here it is: to the compliments our customers are paying us for having furnished them with a truly different and better kind of Store.

Our stock is large, up-to-date and well selected, and the store is well lighted, airy and comfortable.

REMEMBER* when on Broad Street to stop and see us.

This is a very poor weak ad- rtisement, and if run in every per in the city every day for a ll year would probably not get single direct reply. Let's take up and examine it a minute: There's No End" is the head. Well, there's nothing special bout that. What is there in the mple, mild, tame statement There's No End" to arouse con- lence and interest and make you ant to read more. "A New Sort a Store" would have been bet- r, but even that wouldn't have een particularly good. But There's No End" is pointless; of self it means nothing. It is hard frame three words which mean ss than "There's No End."

* * *

Now, as to the body of the ad- ertisement "There's No End to e compliments our customers re paying us'—That, of course, verybody will set down at once s guff, and even if it were true, who's interested? Assuming that his advertiser has really been omplimented, what were the ompliments for? How much more sensible to tell what they were for, so as to get more compliments, than to let it go at simply saying he was complimented. "For having furnished them with a truly different and better kind of store." What is the "truly difference"? What is the superiority? Why not tell it? As a matter of fact, is it not ridiculous not to tell it? "Our stock is large, up to date and well selected." Who believes such claims any more? Everybody makes them, and they have no more weight than so much blank paper. "The store is well lighted, airy and comfortable." All important, but not the sort of qualities that get trade. Everybody likes an airy, light and comfortable store, but these aren't the qualities they go to a store for, important as they are. And even if they were the fact that everybody makes the same claims would reduce their weight to nothing.

Siberian Butter Coming to New York.

Some importations of Canadian and Siberian butter are about to arrive in New York. It is claimed that Western Canada is the only section of the Dominion from which any liberal supplies can be had at present, and that is mostly of the dairy grade. On the other hand, Siberia has considerable butter to export, due partially to the slightly higher prices which have prevailed there this summer, which has to some extent curtailed their exports to Germany, Great Britain and other European countries. The Siberian is said to be about the only butter from any European country which does not contain preservatives, and therefore is practically the only goods that could come here under the new ruling, unless prices here should warrant a change in their customary methods of making. Several local houses which heretofore have not handled any Siberian butter are now testing and trying it in a small way, with a view to operations of some extent in those goods should domestic prices warrant it this fall and winter.

We Can Show You How to Increase Your Business

If you walked down Market or Chestnut Streets at night and one window in a block was brilliantly illuminated, while the rest were in darkness, which would you stop to look at? The lighted one most certainly. If that window displayed goods you needed at a low price, that store would impress itself upon you and most likely you would go back and buy when it was open—because an impression would be made on you.

Did it ever strike you that if you lighted your store window up at night after you closed and exhibited something in it that would attract attention, that passers-by would remember your place and come in when you opened up, to get what you offered, particularly if nearby competitors left their windows in darkness?

If it seems like an unnecessary expense to light your windows when your store is closed, write or phone us and we will show you that you can make up what it will cost you for a month, in one day's new business.

"Is This What I Made?"

If the cook who invented Baked Beans with tomato sauce were to come back and open up some of the cans labeled Baked Beans he would go gladly back to oblivion.

For "Baked Beans" doesn't always mean baked beans any more. In most cases it means beans boiled or steamed, dampened with a little cheap catsup and packed. The result is an attempted fraud on the palate of him who knows the real thing.

L. & S. Baked Beans are really baked in the good new way. We guarantee that absolutely. Baking makes the bean over. Instead of swelling and mushing it up like steaming or boiling, it leaves it just as firm but mealy and melting.

And our tomato sauce is tomato sauce made by an expert.

How Every Man Can Sell More Goods*

A Business Expert Interestingly Tells How Any Merchant of Ordinary Intelligence Can Improve His Selling Powe Using All Your Senses When You Buy Goods. The Pean Woman Who Got the Second Order.

Science of Salesmanship. What is science? Herbert Spencer says science is classified knowledge. That's simple, is it not? Who has the knowledge that we are after? Four classes, namely, the Retail Salesman, the Wholesale Salesman, the Specialty Salesman and the Promoter. This takes in every class of salesman. Each one of these hundreds of thousands of men have ideas of how to sell things. By putting together these ideas the science has been formulated.

What is knowledge? How do we know? Everything we learn we learn through the five senses—seeing, hearing, smelling, touching, tasting. No one living ever learns in any other way. The merchant who learns more than his competitor either sees more, or hears more, or smells more, or touches more, or tastes more. By using these five senses we get sensations. Hold a bottle in front of a new-born child and the eyes will notice nothing. Do this the third or fourth day and you will notice that the child's eyes will follow the bottle. The child has an image. It does not know that it is a bottle, but it registers an image. From images we get concepts, from concepts we form ideas. From ideas we form judgments, from judgments laws, and from laws we establish principles, which is the highest form of thinking. It is not necessary for the business man to go further than judgments. There are four kinds of judgments. Hasty judgments, mistaken judgments, prejudiced judgments and sound judgments. To illustrate: Four card players were playing a game and one fellow trumped his partner's ace, whereupon the partner drew his revolver and shot him, on the ground that no man who would make such a blunder has a right to live. Upon examination they found that the player's cards were all trumps, thus showing that the judgment of the partn was hasty.

Mistaken judgments. Suppo I say that certain curtains are r You see and know they are gre They look red to me because I a color-blind. My judgment is th they are red. My judgment mistaken because I am col blind. My sensations are not c rect. You are ready to excuse for my judgment. And we usually willing to excuse mistak judgments, but we are not so w ing to excuse hasty or false juc ments.

Prejudiced judgments. I am Republican and therefore judgment may be prejudiced, b I certainly approve of Presid Roosevelt's plan and policy of t square deal. When you prefac prejudiced judgment by sayi you may be prejudiced you ma your point very much strong and guard yourself against cr cism. What we are all after sound judgments.

Sound judgments. Good po toes will sell. These are good p tatoes, therefore these potat will sell. This is a sound juc ment and if the potatoes are go and the price is right buy them

You will see the importance training your five senses right, order to have sound judgment.

At the present time I am e perimenting with my six-year-o daughter. The other day I s to her: "Go out and bring me leaf from that Norway maple a a leaf from that peach tree. you see the difference?"

"Can you smell the diff ence?"

"Yes."

"All right, this evening when come home I am going to sell y a load of peach leaves. Now sure that you know all about peach leaf."

"All right."

In the evening I took a hone suckle leaf, which resembles t peach to a certain extent, and p is that power to persuade )ple to purchase at a profit that this power obtained? In two

.ys: First by health building, d, second, by character building.
health building we do not mean ıt you must be an athlete. It is t necessary for you to swing 100-und dumb-bells. You need not know how or be able to "skin the cat." What we mean by commercial health is endurance. You all know what a valuable asset health is. Health is the harmonious development of mind, soul and body, to such a degree that every organ will properly perform its function.

What do we mean by character building? Character is that magnetic force of real manhood and true womanhood, born of a combination of positive faculties and qualities of the body, the intellect, the feeling and the will. This positive and negative is present all through nature and life. We have a positive light, negative darkness. Positive heat, negative cold. In electricity we have the positive pole and the negative pole. The positive stands for power, the negative for the lack of it. The same corresponding conditions prevail in the individual.

In the body we have the positive strength, the negative weakness.

In the intellect we have positive memory and negative forgetfulness. Every one knows what an awful loss in business we can attribute to forgetfulness, and how valuable we find a good memory. I just learned the other day that a Philadelphia real estate agent lost $15,000 because he forgot an engagement.

The feeling. Positive self reliance; negative doubt. Carnegie once said that the faculty of doubt or caution has hindered more great successes than any other one mental thing. What we want is courage and initiative to do that which we feel and think is the right thing to do.

The will. A student came to a teacher and said, "I have a brother who is a drinking man. He wants to stop, and I know you can help him." "No," said the teacher, "I fear we cannot help him, better have him take the Keeley cure." "He has taken that, but of no avail. I know you can help him." "Well, send him in." When he came in the teacher got right up close to him and said, "Down in the bottom of your heart and soul, do you want to stop drinking?" "Yes, I do." "Then bite your teeth and say 'I will.'" "I will." "These are the parts of you that enter into this transaction. First, the body that wants the drink; second, the intellect that does not want it. Your intellect pulls one way and your body

These Sardines Are as Good as Imported

The price-cutting in domestic Sardines has smashed the industry badly, because it has cut the quality.

Some of the domestic Sardines now on the market are literally unfit for food.

We haven't joined the price-cutting ball, for we won't do anything to lower the quality of St. Croix Sardines even a hair's-breadth.

The St. Croix Sardines are now 100 per cent. better than any other domestic Sardines packed. They are packed in ¼ oils and ¾ mustards, and we are one of the very few concerns left who follow the old method of drying and frying the fish in prime oil, and who use nothing but selected salad oil and pure sauce for packing. All Sardine packers agree that this is the best plan, but few are willing to pay its cost.

If you want to offer your trade a domestic Sardine that tastes as good as the imported, look into the St. Croixs.

If you haven't looked it up you probably have no idea how cheap Safety Ark Egg Carriers are. You see we make them ourselves, with machinery that does the whole thing almost in an instant, they are shipped to you knocked down, and there's no way in which they can cost very much.

They're worth to you many times their cost, there's no doubt about it. From the day you put them in, broken eggs will not be known in your store, at least not in the selling department. And it makes clerks proud to work in a store that knows its business and does things in an up-to-date way.

September, October and November are the months in which a large part of the business in Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour is ordered from retailers. You ought to decide this minute whether you are going to push these products this season.

Reasons why you should are first, that we are about beginning a very extensive magazine campaign which is as certain as can be to bring orders to your store; and second, the goods are right—the acme of purity and the perfection of wholesome, nutritious, common-sense foods. the other. Now, the third party steps in and does the deciding. That is the will." "That's the referee." "Good, call him the referee. If the referee decides with the body, you take the drink. If he decides with the intellect you do not take it." This happened some two years ago and the referee has always sided with the intellect. Oh, the power of the will! Make him boss to command you to do the right.

If any man wills to be a successful salesman, and every merchant is a salesman, it is necessary for him to develop, to a marked degree, the following four cardinal essentials: First, endurance, as to the body; second, ability, as to the intellect; third, reliability, as to the soul; fourth, action, as to the will. You cannot think of a bootblack or a corporation president with this harmonious development who is not a success.

So much for the salesman. Now, what about the customer? A scientific salesman must know how to size up his customer. Some salesmen have more intuition than others, and for this reason usually succeed in selling to the abnormal man. A professor of mine once made this statement: "The interior of a man is revealed in his exterior, if he will only analyze the exterior." It is not alone the head, or the hand, or the walk, or his conversation, but it is revealed in the whole man.

The goods. Know your goods. I will cite one incident that came to me recently. In Wilmington, Del., I asked for a bag of peanuts at an Italian's stand. The woman sized me up and said, "I have two kinds, which do you want?" "What is the difference?" I asked, "Have you never been in a peanut factory? Well, I'll tell you. There is a long wide belt and seven girls standing at the side. The first girl picks out the poorest peanuts she sees; the second girl picks out the poorest she sees, and so on to the seventh. Then all that are left on the belt tumble off into a bag." "Give me those that drop off at the end of the belt." I had a friend with me, he bought a bag. Before we left the town we went back to that woman and bought five bags each. Why? Because they were the best peanuts we ever ate, and we wanted to take some home. That woman knew her goods; she taught me something "There is more in business build than in business getting."

How much knowledge we can from every one if we only dr them out. The salesmen that on you know many things. Dr them out.

Finally, the sale. You never a thing without leading your c tomer through the mental law sale.

First, attention; second, intere third, desire; fourth, resolve.

I close by telling you how to member this order. When court a girl you must first get tention. This you may do by dr ing neatly and tastefully. By ke ing well shaved and nails ma cured. Then make her interes in you; make her like you. We ways like the good qualities people. Use tact, by showing y good qualities. Then be honest, telling her your weak o but tell her to keep an upon you, because you are termined to make the w faculties strong. Ask her to h you to make them strong, a she will be interested. The n step is desire, make her want y Because you are sincere, you growing, and she will feel that cannot afford to go through without you. You all know t when a woman wants a thing will have it at any cost, and y have resolve and she has you.

Don't Get the Jobber Rubbed the Wrong Way

If you, Mr. Retailer, have signed any future canned goods contracts, ask your jobber what per cent. of your order he will absolutely guarantee to give you.

In most cases he will make no guarantee whatever. He can't, since the packer has made none to him.

In no case except one will he make a guarantee to deliver you all you ordered, or 100 per cent. That one case is where he buys Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods, for we, who sell those brands, always give a jobber 100 per cent. contracts on them, and the jobber can therefore give it to you.

The moral is to buy the brands that will give you what you buy.

line was preserved pineapple, of which as much as 1,500 cases at a time was sold to manufacturing confectioners in Philadelphia. The fire leaves the pineapple situation particularly bad, as the supply of canned pineapple is extremely light and the price constantly advancing. Already the price of the preserved article has advanced, owing to the fire, from 5 to 6 cents per pound.

It is difficult to see how a sharp scarcity in glaced fruits can be avoided this fall and winter, since outside of the Clausee Co. there are only a very few small concerns, who could not begin to supply the demand, and to import foreign fruits would be too expensive.

Manufacturers who have adopted premium schemes to create a demand for their products, have always given the premiums to consumers. Where manufacturers have offered an incentive to grocers to push their goods, the incentive has always been small. It had to be small, because no individual manufacturer could afford to give a grocer from his individual profits anything more important than a silk hat, an umbrella, etc. But when twenty or more prominent manufacturers, whose products are sold by grocers everywhere, set aside a pa of their advertising appropriations to p into a fund to buy something substanti for the merchant, that something repr sents an article of sufficient value make it worth the grocer's while to tal a real interest in pushing the goods the manufacturers who take this mea of showing their appreciation of the gr cer's services. That the importance this matter may be plain to you, figu out the following: The Knickerbock Chocolate Co., New York, gives you quantity of Universal coupons with the Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford a Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better goo ever came into this market. Add the coupons to the ones you get with t products of the following firms and y will find you can save enough coupo in three months to entitle you to a firs class set of harness, a platform scale a roll-top desk. Within a month a number of oth big local houses will join this enterpris Don't you think this matter is importa enough for you to push the goods these firms? Don't you think t manufacturers who have been been fir to recognize the grocer's right of co sideration should have the grocer hearty co-operation?

Getting Back My Dollar.

Gee, I'm tired to-night! I feel if I'd been winding up about venty miles of red tape.

To begin with, I had no busi-ss to have anything more to do ith a department store. I've vorn I wouldn't a million times. very time I go in one I get a mon in the neck, but my wife inks they're little heavens, so e first thing I know I'm being d into one by her, after I've vorn black and blue I never will ain.

Well, this time I bought a shirt. y wife and I were going rough one day as fast as I could ag her when we came on a shirt le. "Two-dollar neglige shirts duced to $1."

"Oh, do buy one!" says my ife, "you need a new shirt."

"I ain't going to!" I said urly. "It'll take a week to get and I'm too old to waste that uch time."

"You'd better take it," she ged; see what a splendid bar-in it is."

Well, I suppose I have a sneak-g fondness for a bargain, like erybody else, and the thing did ok pretty good, so I up and ought one.

Just as I said, I waited for a hen a while for the change and the ckage, and then grouched out, st as I always do out of a de-rtment store.

The first time that shirt was ashed the color went a glim-ering. You wouldn't have own it at all. Originally it was ue—blue is so becoming to my mplexion—but after it was ashed it looked like a grey day the coal regions.

"I'd take it back," said my wife. They'll give you your money ack when you show the irt."

Well, I didn't like to lose the ollar and I didn't like to go back nd begin unwinding a mile of d tape, but she finally persuaded e to go, so this morning early I ent in there. The store always dvertised "money cheerfully re-nded," so I thought I'd cheer m up by asking for mine.

I went to the salesman who sold me the shirt, and told my little tale.

"Just come this way," he said, "we'll see the aisle manager; he'll fix you up."

After a walk of six weeks we came across the aisle manager.

"This is Mr. Jones, the aisle manager," said the salesman, "he'll fix you up."

I told my little tale to the aisle manager. "I bought this shirt," etc., etc., etc.

"We'll have to see the head of the department about that," he said when I had finished. "Come this way; he'll fix you up."

We walked some more until my old feet were on the ground. Finally we came to the office of the head of the department.

"Mr. Haines about?" asked the aisle manager.

"No," said the stenographer, "but his assistant is in. See him?"

"Guess we'll have to," said the aisle manager. When the assistant looked up and agreed to listen to us the aisle manager said to me: "Tell this gentleman the facts of the case."

I told the assistant head of the department my little tale. "I bought this shirt," etc., etc., etc.

"Hum," said the assistant, reflectively, "that's something you'll have to see Mr. Haines about. He settles all those matters personally. Tell you where you can find him. He's over with Mr. Smith, the advertising manager. You know where that is (to the aisle manager), over back of the leather goods. Take the gentleman over there; Mr. Haines'll fix him up."

"Come right this way, Mr. Haines'll fix you up," said the aisle manager.

"Hold on a minute," I said with asperity, "if we're going on another long walk I'll have to shake some Allen's footease in my shoes—I didn't come prepared for a pedestrian tour around the world. I'm all blistered up now!"

The aisle manager smiled jovially, and by sundown we came to where Mr. Haines was.

Yes, Mr. Haines was in with the advertising manager. "Take a seat; he'll be right out."

He came out in exactly twelve minutes.

The aisle manager turned to me, as a signal for the orchestra

Women Who Think About Their Work

Here is a common-sense preserving jar that leaves all others in the shade, no matter what is claimed for them.

Here are the points in a nutshell:—

1. Has extra wide mouth, for convenience of filling and cleaning. Any woman will grasp this instantly.

2. Requires no separate rubber rings, thus saving their cost and their bother.

3. Special caps as impervious to fruit acid as glass itself.

The Economy Jar will deliver at the end of the year a larger percentage of good fruit than any other jar made. There are no foolish fads about it—it is built on common-sense lines, and particularly appeals to women who think about their work.

to strike up, and I began to sing my little tune. "I bought this shirt," etc., etc., etc.

The head of the department listened.

"Who sold you the shirt?" he asked.

I told him.

"Let's go over and see him," he said.

"Oh, shucks!" I said, "if this is a scheme to walk me to death so I won't need a shirt, it's pretty darned near succeeded! I ain't going to walk another step—I'll wait for a car!"

They snickered like two hideous fools, but stepped right along, so I had to go to.

By and by we reached the salesman. By that time I had made up my mind that if anybody else asked me how it happened I would swat him with a fearful swat. But nobody did, and I began to cool off a little.

They agreed to take the shirt back and give me my money. Then the head of the department said to me:—

"Just take a seat for a few minutes, Mr. Williams (the salesman) will fix you right up."

I slumped down with a weary sigh, and settled myself for a long wait.

By and by the salesman came back, with the necessary authority from President Roosevelt to give me back my dollar. He sent a boy for the head of the department again and in a few more minutes Mr. Haines appeared.

The salesman handed the head of the department some sort of a record, and the head wrote steadily on it for ninety minutes. Then he handed it over to the salesman again.

"You make your record there," he said, pointing to a place.

The salesman wrote and wrote, while the busy hours slipped past. I stood first on one foot, then on the other, and then on my hands.

"We'll need the aisle manager here," finally said the head.

The aisle manager came and added his written version of how I came to get the shirt, why I needed the shirt, who first told me to buy it, what made me such a jackass as to buy it, the names of the only two fools on earth who were bigger fools than I was, and some more pertinent information.

Then the head of the department came and pushed a pencil and paper into my stiff hands.

"Please sign here," he said. I slowly and exhaustedly scrawled my name and handed it back.

Then all three wrote some more and called a boy. The boy went away on his vacation. I waited. Finally he came back, sunburned and happy, with my dollar in his hand. The salesman handed it to the aisle manager, the aisle manager handed it to the assistant head of the department, the assistant handed it to the head of the department, and the head of the department handed it to me.

As for me I limped slowly out, the language that I used as I went outdoing anything that had ever passed my lips before.

Just as I reached the door a package I was carrying came undone, and I stopped at a wrapping desk.

"Son, give me a bit of string, will you?" I said, "I want to tie this package."

"You'll have to see the aisle manager," he said, "we ain't allowed to give string away."

"Then can you give me a piece of red tape?" I snarled at him, gnashing my teeth. If he hadn't moved away I'd a bit his ear off!

Drat 'em!

Here's something that hit me just as I came in from lunch the other day:

Phila., Pa., Sept. 2, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—It seems about eight years or more since I began reading your valuable paper, "Stroller" included. I cannot help notice the enjoyment "Stroller" appears to get out of writing about the weak and hypocritical church member, the animus he seems to have toward the church. I have never noticed him writing about the weak and hypocritical members of any other organization, never an article about the hypocrites in the Odd Fellows or Masons. Of course there are hypocrites in the church. Always have been since the days of Judas Iscariot; always will be as long as the church remains the best and most unselfish organization in the world, because it is only good things that are counterfeited. You never heard of a counterfeit thief or a counterfeit liar, or a counterfeit drunkard. No one tries to counterfeit the bad. Before being in business for myself I was on the road many years and came in contact with straight, honest men in the church and out of the church, also with hypocrites in the church and out of the church, and for every hypocrite in the church I think I have found four out of the church, and whenever I find one who will not go into the church because of the hypocrites, I say to him, "Come along, brother, there's room for one more." Every man who is ashamed to tell his wife or mother how he spent the night, and makes some lie to hide his immorality, is a hypocrite. And I have known many of this class out of the church and very few in it.

In your issue of September 2 "Stroller" writes up five hypocrite among them Smith, who, "Stroller says, "is as mean a man as God eve made." Now, I am not defendin Smith, for I don't know him. know a good many Smiths, b they are a different type. But I wi guarantee that "Stroller" will no go to these men and say thes things to their face, but under a assumed name, or nom de plume, h attacks them in the dark, if no them the church. It is like writin an anonymous letter of abuse. Ca Smith be meaner than that? O can we conceive of anything mor ungrateful and dishonest than fo a man to rob his God who ha given him every blessing he eve received? Rob God of his servic his talents, his Sabbaths, leavin others to do both theirs and h share of rescuing and uplifting h fellowmen, which the church doing,. notwithstanding her fault Is it not just as wrong for a ma to rob his God as to rob his fellow man? Both are decidedly wrong Until "Stroller" gets to be a per fect man, pays his God what h owes him, he had better read and re read Matthew, 7:1-5. Personall I am far from perfect (as my wif will testify), but I am a better ma a better husband, a better fathe a better employer, a better Chri tian for being in the church and feel greatly indebted to it. There fore I write this reply, and I a sure voice the sentiment of man high principled Christian merchan and commercial travelers.

Sincerely
C. Clay Green.

Brother Green, there's one th you ought to take back. I have animus toward the church; noth but the purest respect. My ani is toward the church hypocr who's a thousand times worse t the hypocrite outside the church. cause he uses holy things as a clo while the outside hypocrite do The church hypocrite, when he tends to be a church member, for himself a much higher stand than the other fellow, and so crime is greater when he violates

Another thing, brother. I di attack the men I wrote about. W I attacked was their practices—t hypocrisy. Are those mean qu ties in them any less deserving attack because there are other hy crites with other mean qualiti Give me time, old man, I may around to the others later.

The fact that I don't sign name to what I write has noth to do with it. The only point discussion is whether hypocrisy a church member is a fair sub for adverse criticism. If you ad it is, then you justify my arti And surely you wouldn't deny t it is, would you? As a matte fact, if you are a good church m ber, and I thoroughly believe are, you ought to be just as m against church hypocrites as I a Warning.

Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 3, 1907.

itor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In its efforts to har- us, injure our business and ther its own selfish ends a cer- manufacturer of computing les has been working the large vspapers of the country for reading articles. This is e to arouse public sentiment inst a type of computing le made by the Computing le Co., of Dayton, Ohio, and d by us, and which is now gen- lly in use by storekeepers. In ne cases the papers have been rked for free editorial space.

As there are in use throughout the country over 60,000 of this type of scale, you may realize what a possible market would be opened to our competitor were it to succeed in its attempts to have the merchants' scales condemned or to have them even viewed with suspicion by the public.

The press agent of the competitor referred to works in so devious a manner that he does not usually have articles prepared ready to hand out to the newspapers, but dupes the papers into writing the articles themselves and publishing them as special news matter.

The favorite method is this: A representative of the scale manufacturer referred to will call on the City Sealer in the town in which he is operating, and fill him full of stories about the vast amount of cheating in weight and computations practiced by storekeepers who use computing scales of a certain type. To prove his statement, our competitor's salesman makes an alleged test of the type of scale which he condemns. He also makes a test of his own scale. The result of such a test is obvious. The City Sealer hears one side of the story, and in many cases is deceived. The next step is to give the newspapers a tip in an indirect way that the City Sealer has some so-called "hot stuff" for the news columns on how people are cheated by computing scales; or the City Sealer himself, if deceived, may invite an interview with the City Hall reporter. The subject of wholesale cheating in weight offers fine possibilities for an imaginative writer, and the matter is of such a nature that any reporter or editor might easily be deceived. This is the poisoned arrow used as a first shot in the campaign of the scale manufacturer referred to.

The newspapers frequently fall into the trap. The City Sealer is interviewed and a lively story is written and published. Editorials, as well as news items, sometimes appear on the question, where the editor thinks the public is suffering a great wrong. The suspicion aroused by the publication of these articles becomes general in the community, and this is the first aim of our competitor.

The way is now paved for the emissary of the competitor to approach the aldermen and to propose an ordinance to the City Council. This ordinance is already framed up. It looks innocent enough, and seems, on its face, to offer protection to the public, but it is worded with the intention to condemn a certain type of accurate computing scale now largely used by the storekeepers, but which is not made by our competitor.

Ham Confidence
There is a vast difference between merely "ham" and Swift's PREMIUM ham.
The grocer who just keeps "ham," who buys no special brand, and buys from no particular packer, is just as certain to have a small and irregular ham trade as night is certain to follow day.
But the grocer who sells only Swift's PREMIUM ham, which is always the same and always fine, will have a ham trade that amounts to something. His trade won't care to experiment with other grocers; they're getting what they want and they're getting it all the time.
PREMIUM hams are tender, delicious and—this is important—well advertised.

lic officials, as well as the newspapers, have all been used as tools from time to time, and in various cities, to further the passage of a framed-up enactment which is designed to wipe out competition in a wholesale way by condemning thousands of accurate scales already in use in order to open a possible market for the scales of our rivals.

This scheme was tried in Omaha some months ago. The Mayor and the City Sealer had been influenced by the tricks of the competitor to make a ruling against all of a certain type of scales used in that city and sold by our company. We were compelled to go into the United States Court to prevent the property of merchants from being destroyed, and after a full hearing before the Master in Chancery we secured an injunction restraining the Mayor and City Sealer from carrying out their intentions.

We will welcome any enactment, either municipal, state or Federal, which is genuinely designed to protect the public in the matter of weights and computations. Such laws can only be a help to us. We strenously object, however, to the passage of laws framed by our competitor, which are designed for the sole purpose of injuring our business.

Yours truly,

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 6, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is more active. Prices are tending firmer throughout the list. This applies particularly for spot goods, as there is practically little or no change in futures. We look, however, for better values, due to the larger demand which will occur during this and next month.

Pepper.—Demand is notably better and higher prices are anticipated. Acheens are in light supply. Lampong is steady, demand increasing.

Cayennes.—All grades in good demand. Spot stocks are not large.

White Pepper.—Demand increasing; crops are reported large and prices unusually low, especially futures.

Pimento (Allspice).—Position of the article strong. Demand good and there is little to be had at present. We expect to see much higher prices rule.

Cloves have fluctuated during the week. Futures have been quoted at a wider range in prices. The spice, however, is in thoroughly good shape and it is hard to predict the future.

Mace scarce; demand exceedingly good.

Nutmegs.—It is rumored that future parcels of grinding stock have been ordered exported. This is a serious question and should have the tendency of making prime goods more valuable.

Cassias.—Good, steady, seasonable demand, but prices are practically unchanged.

Gingers.—Quiet and steady. Demand should now increase.

Seeds.—Poppy continues to be scarce and a higher market is predicted for new crop goods. Coriander seed is somewhat firmer and it looks, at this writing, will advance. Caraway seed very firm and new crop is reported short. Higher prices anticipated.

Green Ginger Root.—New goods arriving. Steady; prices are firm and it looks like an advance will occur when heavy demand sets in within this and next month.

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & Co.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—As anticipated in our last market letter, there has been continued activity in the tomato market here, and as the week progressed the demand broadened and the orders increased in quantity from nearly all sections for both prompt shipment and for delivery during September and October. We called attention to the increased buying of tomatoes in lots of one and two carloads, commencing two weeks ago at the ruling prices, and that seems to have been the starting point of the present buying movement. There has been too much rain, followed by too low a temperature both day and night, and not enough warm sunshine to mature and ripen up the fruit. The vines are strong and healthy looking, with plenty of small green tomatoes on them, but unless the weather conditions prove to be more favorable during the next two or three weeks the crop will receive a serious setback which an early frost, of which there is no sign as yet, would make still more serious. The receipts of fresh tomatoes for canning purposes this week were so much smaller than in the week previous that the price per bushel has steadily advanced from 30 cents two weeks ago to 90 cents per bushel this week, and the canned article has advanced 2½ to 5 cents a dozen. The jobbers have followed up the advance promptly, and the heavy buying during this week will probably act as a sustaining force to the market prices, especially in view of the fact that a majority of the canners have sold futures to such an extent that they must withdraw from selling until they have packed sufficient to fill their contracts. The canning season all the way through, so far, has been so peculiar and disappointing that the average packer has largely lost his nerve and is afraid to take the same chances that he would unhesitatingly take in an ordinary season. The situation is interesting and worth close attention.

Besides tomatoes, other lines of vegetables attracted attention and there was liberal buying of peas, string beans, sweet potatoes, baked beans, etc. New lima beans are now coming in.

Those who predicted larger receipts of peaches about this time are disappointed, the fruit is not on the trees. New pears are coming in in small quantities, but they are even scarcer than peaches so far. Note further advances in the prices of peaches. Blackberries are stronger. Pineapples are worth attention for your fall and winter trade.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The tomato market in Baltimore is stronger. This is due to the heavy falling off in the arrivals of raw material and higher prices for it.

Tomatoes for future delivery are practically not being offered. A few sales were made last week of No. 3's at 85 cents and No. 10's at $2.65 per dozen, and it might be possible here and there to buy at these figures. The majority of packers, however, are out of the market. The reports all seem to agree that there is a good crop of tomatoes in sight; that is, the fruit is on the vines, but we need warm weather throughout September to get the tomatoes. There is a good, big acreage, and of course this will help to offset any damage the crop might sustain from early frost or other unfavorable weather conditions. At this stage of the game, however, it is impossible to say much about the situation one way or the other. If we have good weather throughout September, there will be a good many, but if, however, the weather is bad, some of numerous prophets of a tren dous pack will no doubt be " ing to the woods."

Peaches.—Nothing new to port. The crop in this sectio as near a failure as we have had. There are a few pea being packed in Baltimore day, but it is now evident we are not going to have anyt like a pack of peaches this y

Reports regarding the crop are not encouraging.

THOS. G. CRANWELL & C

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Minneapolis.

There is a growing disposition the part of the organized neapolis grocers to do away h the practice of sending out umber of men to take orders on ir routes every morning.

A good many grocers feel that orders could be taken much re easily and quickly over the phone, and they need the men the store in the morning. ne grocers have as many as e or six order men who are out the forenoon, just when busi- s is most active in the store. ten they do not get in until ernoon and then there is a fear- rush to get their orders put up l delivered, and an inevitable ch of complaints from waiting usewives. If the orders were en by telephone the goods ld be delivered much more ickly.

Several of the large stores have already cut out the practice and they report that their customers are better pleased by the new system. There is little or nothing for the order men to do around the store in the afternoon and they are really paid a full day's wages for a half a day's work.

The matter may be considered at a future meeting of the Grocers' Association.

French Prune and Nut Crop Prospects.

French prunes are this year expected to yield a medium crop only, and higher prices for the new campaign are to be anticipated, especially if the California crop is equally poor. The prune crop of Bosnia, in Austria-Hungary, will be a total failure, and there will not be sufficient supplies from that country to supply local requirements. Bosnia is usually depended upon to supply the German market to a large extent. As to French prunes we already have new crop quotations of $23.16 (120 francs) per 220 pounds (100 kilo) for the No. 50 grade, and $19.30 (100 francs) for the No. 60 grade, this being an increase of $7.72 (40 francs) over last year's terms.

An excellent crop of French almonds is assured. Italy gives a half crop, and Spain a good half crop. Sicilian and Majorca shelled almonds, spot, are worth $46.32 (240 francs) per 220 pounds (100 kilos), while the same grades for August and September delivery are quoted at $35.70 (185 francs).

Paying the Duty

If your customer demands an imported ginger ale, it is simply from ignorance that a brand just as good is made here—Clicquot Club. The man who pays the price of an imported ale is paying not for extra quality, but for the duty. Compared with Clicquot Club there is no extra quality to pay for.

Clicquot Club is made in Massachusetts by experts. The factory is spotless and the materials the best money can buy. Clicquot Club is the most widely sold brand of ginger ale in the world. You can sell it steadily all the year round.

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

BELL'S SEASONING

has always been one of the speediest selling specialties a grocer handled. One thing—it has such a tremendous field. Every family in the land uses dressing for roast meat and poultry.

Sometimes—if she doesn't know or hasn't tried Bell's Seasoning—the housewife makes her own seasoning. Very often it is good, but many, many times she doesn't hit it, and then the palate protests.

Bell's Seasoning never varies, and because it is made on a famous recipe it always exceeds in deliciousness the best efforts of the housewife.

You'll never stop selling this if you once begin.

The William G. Bell Company, Boston, Mass.

What Rennet Must Do to Be Good

Good rennet has gotten to be one of the most staple dessert specialties that a grocer can sell.

If it is good. To be good, it must coagulate milk in a few minutes and it must not spoil. James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet fills these requirements under a double-barreled guarantee. And besides that, it has the flavor—the clean, delicate, penetrating flavor that makes rennet-eating grow into a habit.

As to profit, $3.00 return on a $1.50 investment is good enough, eh?

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

HOW TO SMILE AT COMPETITION

Give individuality to everything you sell and it will make little difference to you what your competitors do.

Instead of selling "butter" and "coffee" and "tea," sell some particular butter and coffee and tea, and your store will cease to be simply a grocery store, and will become a particular and distinctive grocery store.

Take for example Gurnse Butter. It is an exclusive brand that identifies and sets apart the store handling it. It is the best way to give the individuality to your butter department, which applied to your whole stock, will make your store to a great extent independent of competition.

Fresh, sweet creamery butter, always regular and always perfect.

Don't You Believe "There's Nothing in a Name"

Because there is. If you see De Rago on a bottle of olive oil it means that the oil has been pressed only from perfect olives. Instead of beating the trees to get the fruit for De Rago Oil, and squeezing everything that falls from the trees and bottling it, for De Rago Olive Oil the olives are picked—only the perfect ones—and the result is perfect oil.

It's the kind infants and invalids can take into their delicate stomachs and thrive on.

Sell De Rago—push it—and watch your trade, for it increases.

Rae's Lucca Olive Oil

An Olive Oil of the purest quality—pressed only from perfect olives and carefully preserved from contact with anything that would hurt its exquisite flavor; beautiful to the eye and agreeable to the taste.

ATMORE'S MINCE MEAT

"It IS Pure!"

ATMORE & SON Philadelphia

Why Beans Are Best Body-builders for Children

Because Beans are richer in Proteid than the best Beefsteak, which costs three times their price.

Beef contains 20 pounds of this body-building Proteid in every 100 pounds.

Beans contain 23 to 24 pounds of this same nitrogenous Proteid in every 100 pounds.

Beans as ordinarily cooked have serious handicaps.

Their texture is so dense and close that the digestive juices of the stomach cannot penetrate them freely enough to digest them fully—and so a large part of their most valuable body-building is lost.

This is why the "Snider Process" of cooking Beans became necessary. The "Snider Process" not only eliminates the excess of sulphur, but renders the Beans more porous, and so twice as digestible as they could possibly be without this process.

YOU SEE IT COMING

FILLING A GLASS LAMP FONT is a very simple operation because the surface of the contents is seen rising toward the top. Carelessness is the only excuse for pouring in too much and going beyond the capacity.

A METAL FONT is not so easily filled because you can only guess how much is in it. Experience may enable you to guess fairly close but absolute accuracy is Impossible.

OLD STYLE SCALES present the same difficulties. No weight is shown until you have too much and the scale goes down. You must either take a little out or suffer a loss.

MONEYWEIGHT AUTOMATIC SCALES show at all times the weight on the scale and you pour on the goods until the correct weight or money value is indicated. This means a prevention of loss and a saving of money.

OLD STYLE scales prevent you from seeing their defects with the accompanying loss of merchandise and profit.

We ask the opportunity of showing you what it amounts to. The coupon will send our representative to you.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.;" but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

OF THE GROCERY BUSINESS

There are no "ups and downs" in SHREDDED WHEAT. It is always the same, always pure, always right, a steady seller—not a "fad," but a food. The sale of SHREDDED WHEAT BISCUIT and TRISCUIT for July were the largest in the history of the business. Did you sell your share?

If you can't "talk" Shredded Wheat get posted by sending for our booklet, "Shreds of Life," which tells all about the world's standard cereal food, and the wonderful factory in which it is made.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

Postum Cereal Co. Mix Up with Collier's Weekly

After a Warm Interchange of Compliments the Collier People Sue Postum Co. for $750,000 Damages. The Collier Article Which Precipitated the Trouble and the Post Reply Which Brought the Law Suit.

Mr. C. W. Post, the scrappy head of the Postum Cereal Co., makers of Postum Cereal and Grape-Nuts, is in an exceedingly warm conflict with "Collier's Weekly," a New York publication, which has for months run a series of articles attacking various public fakes, notably patent medicine fakes. In one of these articles "Collier's" accused Mr. Post of lying in some of his claims for Grape-Nuts, and Mr. Post came back in a stinging advertisement which he published in daily papers all over the United States. The Collier people construed the Post reply as libellous and have sued him for $750,000 damages.

The observation in "Collier's" which precipitated the whole trouble was the following, which appeared in the issue of July 27th:—

> One widely-circulated paragraph labors to include the impression that that Grape-Nuts will obviate the necessity of an operation for appendicitis. This is lying and potentially deadly lying. Similarly Postum continually makes reference to the endorsement of a distinguished doctor or a prominent health official, persons as mythical, doubtless, as they are mysterious.

Mr. Post came back in a half column newspaper advertisement, which for vigor of denunciation went the Collier article one better. This advertisement, which appeared simultaneously in all sections of the country, and is said to have involved an expenditure of $150,000. Its text was as follows:—

THE "YELL-OH" MAN
And One of His Ways.

To call a man a liar seems rude, so we will let the reader select his own term.

Some time ago the manager of "Collier's Weekly" got very cross with us because we would not continue to advertise in his paper.

We have occasionally been attacked by editors who have tried to force us to advertise in their papers at their own prices and on their own conditions, failing in which we were to be attacked through their editorial columns. The reader can fit a name to that tribe.

We had understood that the editor of "Collier's" was a wild cat of the Sinclair "jungle bungle" type, a person with curdled gray matter, but it seems strange that the owners would descend to using their editorial columns, yellow as they are, for such rank out-and-out falsehoods as appears in their issue of July 27th, where the editor goes out of his way to attack us, and the reason will appear tolerably clear to any reader who understands the venom behind it.

We quote in part as follows: "One widely-circulated paragraph labors to induce the impression that Grape-Nuts will obviate the necessity of an operation in appendicitis. This is lying, and, potentially deadly lying. Similarly, Postum continually makes reference to the endorsements of 'a distinguished physician' or 'a prominent health official,' persons as mythical, doubtless, as they are mysterious."

We do not hesitate to reproduce these mendacious falsehoods in order that it may be made clear to the public what the facts are, and to nail the liar up so that people may have a look at him. If this poor clown knew what produced appendicitis he might have some knowledge of why the use of Grape-Nuts would prevent it. Let it be understood that appendicitis results from long-continued disturbances in the intestines, caused primarily by undigested food, and chiefly by undigested starchy food, such as white bread, potatoes, rice, partly cooked cereals, and such. These lie in the warmth and moisture of the bowels in an undigested state and decay, generating gases, and irritating the mucus surfaces until, under such conditions, the lower part of the colon and the appendix become involved. Disease sets up, and frequently of a form known as appendicitis.

Now, then, Grape-Nuts food was made by Mr. C. W. Post, after he had an attack of appendicitis, and required some food in which the starch was predigested. No such food existed; from his knowledge of dieteties he perfected the food; made it primarily for his own use, and afterward introduced it to the public. In this food the starch is transformed by moisture and long-time cooking into a form of sugar, which is easily digested and does not decay in the intestines. It is a practical certainty that when a man has approaching symptoms of appendicitis, the attack can be avoided by discontinuing all food except Grape-Nuts, and by properly washing out the intestines. Most physicians are now acquainted with the facts, and will verify the statement.

Of course, this is all news, and should be an education to the person who writes the editorials for "Collier's," and who should take at least some training before he undertakes to write for the public.

Now, as to the references to "a distinguished physician" or "a prominent health official" being "mythical persons." We are here to wager "Collier's Weekly," or any other skeptic or liar, any amount of money they care to name, and which they will cover, that we will produce proof to any board of investigators that we have never yet published an advertisement announcing the opinion of a prominent physician or health official on Postum or Grape-Nuts when we did not have the actual letter in our possession. It can be easily understood that many prominent physicians dislike to have their names made public in reference to any article whatsoever; they have their own reasons, and we respect those reasons, but we never make mention of endorsements unless we have the actual endorsement, and that statement we will back with any amount of money called for.

When a journal wilfully prostitutes its columns to try and harm a reputable manufacturer in an effort to force him to advertise, it is time the public knew the facts. The owner or editor of "Collier's Weekly" cannot force money from us by any such methods.

POSTUM CEREAL CO, Ltd.

The next chapter was the service of papers in the $750,000 libel suit. There are three plaintiffs, Peter F. Collier and Robert Collier, publishers, and Norman F. Hapgood, editor. Each asks $250,000. The Colliers gave out that they had reason to believe that Mr. Post wrote the advertisement himself, and based on that fact criminal proceedings would be begun against him personally. When confronted with this statement Mr. Post admitted at once that he wrote the advertisement, and suggested that he would probably write some more along the same line.

So that the conflict promises to be interesting.

Slap for Federal Food Authorities.

Regarding Sulphuring of Dried Fruits, San Francisco Chamber of Commerce Make Vigorous Representations to United States Secretary of Agriculture.

The weak and vacillating attitude of the Federal food authorities toward the use of sulphur in dried fruits has been sharply rebuked through a pronunciamento sent to the United States Secretary of Agriculture by the San Francisco (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, copy of which has been sent the "Grocery World." The text follows:—

> Honorable James Wilson, Secretary of Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.—Dear Sir: The Trustees of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco venture to address you in the matter of the rules proposed for the administration of the national food and drugs act in so far as it relates to the sulphuring of California dried fruits.
> We do not propose to offer information of a technical character, but if the idea be entertained that the protest from California arises merely from the concern of merchants or packers interested in this line of business, we must respectfully protest that such is far from the case. Those chiefly concerned are the farmers, for it is obvious that the buyers and packers of dried fruits are not obliged to take "illegal" fruit on contracts made, nor under their sales contracts could Eastern buyers require the packers to deliver, even though the promise from immunity from prosecution be given by your department.
>
> Under the present uncertain conditions the banks are unwilling to supply the usual funds against crop mortgages, warehouse receipts or other collateral. The market has shown a sharp decline; goods sold for future delivery, "subject to approval on arrival and examination"—the usual terms—will be examined most critically, and in many cases rejected ostensibly for fear of the pure food law, but in reality because of the decline in the market and the ability of the buyer to get similar goods for less money.
>
> We consider that the ruling made by decision 76, as applied to California dried fruits, has already done our State and its greatest industry serious injury and grave injustice. Millions of pounds of dried fruit cured with the fumes of sulphur have been consumed annually for many years. So far as we can learn there has never been an instance reported of injury resulting from the eating of such dried fruits, nor even a rumor of suspicion of such injury. It may be unnecessary to remind you that although the sulphur dioxide has doubtless appeared in percentage greater than permitted in Decision No. 76, in the ordinary rinsing, stewing and preparations for the table the sulphur dioxide for the most part disappears.
> Some years ago the German government—perhaps the most scrupulous in the matter of pure food laws—made a ruling allowing 125 1000ths of 1 per cent. sulphur dioxide in dried fruits, nearly four times the quantity allowed in Decision No. 76. On further investigation the German authorities removed even this restriction as being unnecessary and there is at the present time no limitation.
>
> In consideration of these facts, we respectfully ask that the ruling as applied to dried fruits be withheld until your present investigation demonstrates that public safety requires such action. The promise of immunity from prosecution does not relieve the present depressed market conditions, through which serious loss is forced upon the thousands of growers throughout our State and through no desire or action of the packers; indeed, to their serious loss and detriment as well as to that of the farmers.
>
> Hoping to receive your favorable consideration, we have the honor to be, very respectfully yours,
> Chamber of Commerce.

How many of you have taken advantage of the offer made by S. B. C & Sons Co., of Camden, N. J.? All that have, appreciate by this time the benefit it contains. Those that have not do not realize exactly what they are missing. To the up-to-date storekeeper 70 per cent. is an attraction, and that is what the firm offers. Remember, Goff's remedies are standards, and are sold by 14,000 grocers.

TRADEMARK REGISTRATIO

Probably No Remedy for Larkin Nuisance Here

Pennsylvania Merchants Jubilant Over Mistaken Belief That Pennsylvania Act Taxing Brokers Can Be Used Against Larkin Soap Peddlers. How Soap Peddlers Operate. Extract from Legal Opinion on the Subject.

The retail merchants of some of the interior districts of Pennsylvania have been congratulating themselves that an act passed by the last Pennsylvania Legislature can be used to cripple the Larkin soap business. Witness the following dispatch to a Philadelphia newspaper:—

MAIL ORDER TAX DISPUTE.

Enforcement of Law Agitates Women Who Buy to Obtain Premiums.

[Special Telegram to the Public Ledger.]

Spring City, Aug. 29.—The last Legislature passed a law making all persons who sell soap and other articles from mail order houses liable to a tax of $10. This has caused trouble in the homes of more than 600 women in the twin boroughs, as there are upwards of 60 clubs, of ten each, doing business with such houses for the premiums they receive.

During the last few days several agents of firms have been in town endeavoring to sell their articles and obtaining evidence against persons who are selling without having paid the tax. The groceryman will also take the matter up and a boycott is threatened.

So far as can be learned, this dispatch refers to the act of May 7, 1907, entitled, "An act to provide revenue by imposing a license tax on all stock brokers, bill brokers, note brokers, exchange brokers, merchandise brokers, factors or commission merchants, real estate brokers and agents and pawnbrokers, whether persons, firms, limited partnerships or corporations, providing for the collection of the said tax, and imposing certain duties on county treasurers and mercantile appraisers." There was a bill introduced in the last Pennsylvania Legislature imposing a direct tax upon all such schemes as the Larkin scheme, but it failed of passage.

In the act of May 7, 1907, above referred to, a merchandise broker is defined as follows: "Merchandise brokers are those who for a commission or other compensation, make contracts of sale or purchase of property for others." A minimum tax of $11.75 is imposed, with a larger assessment according to the business done.

There seems to be no real ground for believing that the above act can be construed as having any application to soap peddling whatever, much as it might be hoped to. The matter was referred to Elton J. Buckley, Esq., for an opinion, which in part was as follows:—

> I am convinced, after a careful reading of the act and the examination of some authorities, that the law does not apply to soap canvassers. The latter operate in two ways: In some cases they will take orders for full boxes, ordering same shipped direct to the buyer. This is interstate commerce, and cannot be interfered with by a State tax, regardless of the question whether the local seller is an agent or a broker. In other cases the canvasser will herself order from the manufacturer, and upon receipt will parcel out to her various customers the portions purchased. In this case the essential feature of brokerage, i. e., acting for another, is lacking. The seller has sold for herself, and could not be taxed either as broker or factor, though she would be liable to a mercantile tax as a retail dealer.
> From no standpoint can soap canvassers be viewed as brokers in my judgment. At most, they are agents, precisely as a traveling salesman is an agent. "A traveling salesman who exhibits samples of his employer's goods and takes orders from purchasers, is not a broker, even though he be compensated for his services by commissions on the sales effected by him." Hamberger vs. Mareus, 157 Pa., 133.

The Price of Food Products. Cocoa Prices to Be Still Higher. Mr. Callanan Says Fruits Do Pay the Grocer. Food Label Regulation Operative October 1st. Small Items of Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, September 13, 1907.

Retailers say that the advancing prices of many staples calls for more explanations than are usually necessary in order to show that conditions in the wholesale markets are responsible. Butter, eggs, vegetables and fruits are all unusually high for this time of the year, and various other foods are either going up or are said to be likely to do so. The latest talk is that milk is to be put up by the dealers so that they will get 9 or 10 cents a quart from the consumers instead of 8 cents, the usual price at present. The grocers will naturally make an advance equal to whatever the milk dealers make. The new contracts which the large handlers of milk have been making with the producers for the year beginning with October are on a higher plane than the old scale.

Consumers now pay 10 cents a quart for milk whose quality is certified by the city's Board of Health, and this kind of milk has a large sale, as many doctors advise its use, especially for children. This milk, it is said, will go up to 12 cents or perhaps 15 cents.

The high price of eggs is drawing from the warehouses considerable quantities that had been placed in storage in the expectation of keeping them there until next winter. The West is using the production from day to day, the brokers say, so that shipments to this city have greatly declined.

Several grocers in talking of the high price of food said that while the general public puts the blame on the weather, the crops and the trusts, yet it pays to keep on making it clear to customers that no unusual profits are being made by the man who sells at retail; that, on the contrary, he is not always making as much as he did when prices were lower.

The high price of cocoa, to which attention has been called in your columns, continues the subject of discussion in the trade, and the prediction is made in some quarters that still higher prices are to be declared by October and possibly within the next ten days. An advance of 2 cents a pound was made Monday by some of the manufacturers.

On the question whether the price of the bean has gone up because of the consumption outrunning the production or because of manipulation of the market by speculators, a manufacturer said today that in his opinion both explanations apply, the conditions resulting from a combination of causes. He said that it is not impossible that the speculative holders of the beans will force the prices so high as to injure the sale of the manufactured product and then there will be a quick fall.

As to the consumption, this manufacturer said that it amounted this year, up to August 31st, to 26,446 tons, as compared with 23,92 tons for the corresponding perio of last year, indicating a handson gain. He is paying 25 to 27 cent a pound for grades of beans whic he bought a year ago for 13 to 13½ cents.

Some dealers have been dis cussing the question as to whethe or not it pays a grocer in New Yor to sell fruits and vegetables. A far as fruits are concerned—an they are perhaps considered th most doubtful by many—a positiv and affirmative answer is now give after a trial of nearly a year by J. Callanan, the Vesey street gr cer, and he follows up this depart ment by introducing another that i a little out of the ordinary in th modern grocery store. Next wee he will send to an upper story hi stock of making up orders and wi rearrange the ground floor, cuttin a new door in the front and alterin the show windows, all for the pur pose of introducing and makin prominent a candy departmen

Compound Jams and Jellies Up.

High Price of Apples and Advance in Glucose Cause Enhancement of Values. Pure Jams Likely to Advance on Account of Short Fruit Crops.

The exceedingly high apple market and the advancing glucose market have caused a sharp advance in the price of compound jams and jellies. On account of the short crops of small fruits the price of pure jams and jellies seems also on the verge of an advance. The advance up to date ranges from 12 to 30 per cent.

The base of practically all compound jams and jellies is apple juice or apple pulp, and all such products are therefore directly affected by the extremely high prices at present asked for apples. Apple butter, for instance, quoted a short time ago at 85 cents a dozen, is now $1.10.

Peach preserves will be particularly scarce and high this year.

Collier vs. Post.

Mr. C. W. Post, of the Postum Cereal Co., asserted recently in one of his advertisements that Grape-Nuts would ward off an operation for appendicitis. "Collier's Weekly" called him a "deadly" liar for saying so. Mr. Post retorted that the Collier's outfit were yellow blackmailers and only attacked him because he wouldn't advertise in their paper. The Collier people then sued Mr. Post for $750,000 libel damages and that is where this very pretty controversy stands at the present writing.

This melee is sure to be of great public benefit, for out of it is reasonably sure to come absolute knowledge whether Grape-Nuts will avoid appendicitis or not.

Squeezed Out.

Business competition has done one striking thing, at least—it has absolutely squeezed every iota of meaning out of some of the most meaty words and phrases in the English language.

For instance, take the following:

Dealer in Fine Groceries.
Fancy.
Choice.
Extra Fancy.
Packed for fine trade.
Best in the market.
Better than elsewhere

These are stock phrases of the grocery business and it is not exaggeration to say that in this day they mean no more than blank paper. Men label goods "extra fancy" which are scarcely choice, without a thought of the deception; label manufacturers even sell stickers bearing "packed for fine trade" to any one with the price, and the buyer attaches them to anything he likes without a second's thought that they call for anything in particular. "Best in the market" has become a travesty and "Dealer in Fine Groceries" an idle commonplace which men use not because it has any concerte meaning, but because it is a custom.

The phrase that talks louder than all of them in concert is "money back if dissatisfied." That always means something.

Pure Vacillation.

A California daily paper, commenting on the attitude of the Federal Food Commission toward the use of sulphur in evaporated fruits, speaks as follows:—

> One packer says that he does not give Secretary Wilson's promises of lenieney mueh weight, as he will have no authority in the matter after the ease onee gets into eourt, and there it may be taken by one of the State or municipal health offieers throughout the eountry under the State laws, or even eity ordinances, which, in general, have been framed after the national law, and provide for following the rulings of the department in administration.

The position of the Federal authorities on this sulphur matter is one of astounding weakness and vacillation. When the Federal food law was first enacted it was given out that no sulphur could be used either in molasses or evaporated fruits. Up went a fearful cry from the manufacturers that their business would be ruined, and the authorities then launched a campaign of temporizing which is still on. They gave out that no prosecutions would be brought until the question of sulphur in wines was decided. For months nothing followed, but the trade never lost their feeling of anxious uncertainty. Then, after nearly a year, came Ruling No. 76, which set the maximum percentage of sulphur in food products at 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. This also left the manufacturers unsatisfied and their cries of protest were resumed. Under their influence the Secretary of Agriculture then announced that no prosecutions would be brought against sulphured goods of this year's pack, even though they contain more than 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. But he has refused to put this in writing or to make it definite at all, and the promise is therefore naturally distrusted.

Why, as a business proposition this is really unworthy of a schoolboy! Is the Secretary of Agriculture sincere when he says no prosecutions shall be brought this year? But first if he is right in his premises, has he the legal right to suspend the law even granting sincerity? If he is sincere and has the legal right, why does he not do it in a sensible way, i. e., by making a definite formal order in the case so that we may all know where we are, at least for a term?

The "Grocery World" does not believe with some of the trade that this uncertainty of method comes from a generous desire to give the trade every chance. We believe that it comes solely from a lack of confidence in the position assumed toward sulphur and preservatives.

An Iridescent Dream.

The last number of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Bulletin contained a paragraph which without trying reveals a striking development of modern trade. The paragraph is as follows:—

> The head of the family owes it to the children whom he is rearing to marke his purehases of articles of food and drink from dealers whom he can trust. He will have little trouble in finding such. He should be personally acquainted with his milkman and should know considerable about that milkman's business. He has a right to know. He ought to be familiar with the sources of the milkman's milk supply. He ought to know about the surroundings of the dairy, the condition of the eows, the methods under whieh they are eared for and all things needful to give him a pretty clear notion of the condition of the milk consumed by his children and the other members of his family.

This is a good theory, but in this day it won't carry out. It ought to, but it won't. Unquestionably a man should know the origin of the food he eats, and in the old days, when merchandising was primitive, he could know it. He can't to-day, however, because the old primitive merchandising has given way to a complicated machine in which a product may pass through a dozen hands before it reaches the consumer. Even in its simplest form the plan makes absolute knowledge impracticable. Where formerly Jones, the butcher, killed his own meat, often from his own cattle, and sold it direct to his customer, to-day the Chicago meat packers kill it from cattle which they buy in the open market. And bef the meat reaches the consume often goes through at least more hands—the jobber's and retailer's. Milk, the subject of above paragraph, presents the sa condition, and so does practic every article of food. The n who literally acted upon the prai worthy principle that he sho know the original source of food—in other words, know the tails of the milkman's business, conditions of the cows and the da —would spend his time seeking unattainable. He could not lea In this day consumers must depe to an extent never the case befo upon the good faith and the prob of their merchants.

The Consistency of Sunday-closing Laws.

In certain localities the autho ties are assiduously cultivati trouble by deavoring to e force the old bl Sunday-closi laws against the small storekeepe who have formed the habit of doi business on Sunday much as other days. In principle these la are good. If we are to be a Go fearing people, let us abstain as f as we can from all manner worldly employment. But it is d sirable that we should be consiste in our observances. Where is t consistency in closing the groce store and permitting such oth forms of labor as railroading, tro leying, choir singing by paid singe and many others? These thing are work, and they are worldl work. Very likely the magistrat who issues the warrant against th small grocer who sells on Sunda will ride on a trolley on the Sabbat Day, thus doing his share to compe work of another sort.

These other things are justifie by the excuse of public necessity But the procuring of food may b even a direr public necessity tha trolley riding or choir singing Where shall the line be drawn?

All this is beside the questio whether a grocer should voluntar ily sell on Sunday or not. Unques tionably he should not.

Grapes are now well into their season. New York and Delaware are supplying most of the shipments, prices ranging from $1 to $1.25 per case. A few Niagaras are in and a few Concords. Moore's Early are also seen in market.

A Lawsuit That Teaches a Lesson hiladelphia Grocer Compelled to Pay Damages to Customer Who Fell Over Hole in His Pavement. Moral Is That Constant Care Should Be Exercised to Leave No Loop Hole for Vexatious Litigation.

A case which emphasizes the care hich a merchant should exercise leave no loophole open through hich he may be betrayed into anoying and expensive lawsuits, has ist been decided by the Pennsylania Supreme Court. The dendant was Robert J. Milligan, a etail grocer of Forty-third street nd Lancaster avenue, Philadelphia, nd the plaintiff was Jane Brown, ne of his customers. Mrs. Brown's usband joined her in the suit, as is ustomary in actions of this charcter.

The facts of the case were as follows: On August 2, 1902, between and 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Mrs. Brown, one of the plaintiffs, was coming out of a store at the orner of Forty-third street and Lancaster avenue, in Philadelphia, nd, as she alleges, stepped into a hole, in the pavement about six nches from the door sill of the said tore in which she had been buying goods. She was carrying a market basket filled with groceries on one rm and under the other arm she had a package of dry goods. She had bought the groceries in the defendant's store, in stepping out of which onto the sidewalk she fell. There were boxes and barrels on one side of the door of the store and a display of goods on the other side. A young man who waited upon her n the store came out in advance of her carrying a sack of flour which she had just purchased from him. The young man, Grau by name, was an employee of the defendant. Mrs. Brown says she expected her son to meet her, and as she left the store she looked up to see whether he was coming down Forty-third street. The fall injured her ankle, and she suffered pain and loss of time and her husband lost her services for a time and incurred a doctor's bill and other expenses. The action was brought for the recovery of damages resulting from the said accident to Mrs. Brown. The jury found a verdict in favor of James Brown for $68, and in favor of Jane Brown for $96. Judgment being entered on said verdicts, the defendant appealed.

The case was practically fought over the one question whether Mrs. Brown had been guilty of contributory negligence; that is whether she had taken the best possible care of herself under the circumstances. If she had not, the rule is that she cannot recover damages, even though the grocer had been negligent himself. It was practically admitted at the trial that leaving the hole in the pavement amounted to legal negligence, and that the damages awarded were correct.

The court's opinion on the question of Mrs. Brown's contributory negligence was in part as follows:—

> The evidence shows that this hole had been there for several weeks, and that it had been caused by the defendant's employees taking heavy barrels and boxes out on the pavement in such a manner that they had broken the pavement and caused the said hole. Therefore, the jury could find that the defendant had constructive notice of this unsafe place within a few inches of the door sill of his store. The contention on the part of the learned counsel for the appellant is that Mrs. Brown was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the court ought to have given a binding instruction in favor of the defendant. In support of this contention it is argued that the accident happened in broad daylight, and that if Mrs. Brown had been looking where she was going, as she ought to have done, she could have and undoubtedly would have seen this hole, and she would have been bound to avoid it.
> The defendant was a merchant carrying on a large business, and he invited people to enter his store and go out of it over the defective pavement. The location of the hole within six inches of the door sill would, manifestly, make it less conspicuous than if it had been out in the pavement where people were accustomed to walk up and down the street. Mrs. Brown gives a reasonable explanation of why she failed to see this hole when she entered the store. She says she met a lady coming out whose dress skirt covered this hole so that she (Mrs. Brown) was unable to see it. It is in evidence that hundreds of persons passed in and out of the store in a single day. It is also in evidence that this hole had been covered with a piece of board for some time, but it was not there at the time of the accident. Mrs. Brown entered the store to make purchases, and she was well loaded with some goods when she passed out of the store and met with the accident. She was immediately preceded by an employee of the defendant who was carrying her sack of flour which she had just purchased, with other goods, from the defendant's store. We think she had a right to assume that the entrance to the store was in a reasonably safe condition, and it is not likely that any one would critically inspect the doorway and the pavement immediately connected therewith, either in going in or coming out of the store. A person turning from the main pavement to enter a store would naturally look at the door, or, if it was open, look into the store.

While the case at bar is close to the border line as to the contributory negligence of Mrs. Brown, we are clearly of the opinion that it does not fall within the class of cases where the court can declare, as a matter of law, that she was guilty of contributory negligence.

The decision of the lower court was therefore sustained.

California Evaporated Fruit Men Solve Sulphur Problem.

They Agree to Give Trade Guarantee for Protection Against Federal Prosecution Instead of Guarantee of Legality.

The California Fruit Canners' Association and other California producers of dried fruit have adopted a solution of the sulphured fruit problem. The producers have admitted that they used more sulphur in their evaporated fruits than the Federal food authorities said was permissible. In spite of this, the Secretary of Agriculture promised that no prosecutions would be brought this season, but refused to give any more than his word to this effect. The recent ruling put the packer in a position where he could not guarantee his goods to be in conformity with the law, and it has been a question whether the trade would agree to take the fruit without the guarantee.

The packers have now adopted the plan which the "Grocery World" suggested several weeks ago was the most practicable—they are giving a guarantee not of conformity with the law, but of protection against Federal prosecution. There is no guarantee of immunity against State prosecution, but it is scarcely likely that any State Food Department will attack what is permitted by the Federal Government. In Pennsylvania the Food Department is absolutely bound by the Federal regulations.

In consideration of this guarantee it is probable that practically all the trade will now accept deliveries.

Near-by cantaloupes are glutted. The range is 20 to 50 cents per basket. Colorado cantaloupes are selling very low for the season—$1.50 per crate—owing to the heavy supply of near-by fruit.

Foreign Grocery News Delivered Through Washington

Last Smyrna Fig Season Unprofitable to Shippers. Heavy Increase in India Tea Business. American Consul Says We Can Sell More Butter in Malta. In Puerto Plata Cheap American Butter Sells for Forty Cents a Pound.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Sept. 13, 1907.

Last season proved unfavorable for the majority of shippers of Smyrna figs, according to Consular reports. Owing to overlarge forward sales prices were started unexpectedly high, and the keen competition to obtain figs to fill orders already booked caused prices to be firmly maintained during September and to be even advanced in October, despite the falling markets abroad. It is therefore expected that export merchants at Smyrna will be a little more reserved this year. Foreign buyers are also evincing more care as to the dealers with whom they contract. If this policy is carried out it is probable that the fig trade in general will be healthier and more satisfactory to those immediately interested than it has been for years. The present prospects for the crop are exceptionally favorable. The trees are laden with fruit apparently free from blight. The yield is estimated at 120,000 loads, or 26,500 tons, as against 24,800 tons in 1906 and 22,000 tone in 1905.

Since beginning, the tea industry in India has made a steady and remarkable growth. In 1885, 71,525,977 pounds were produced, while the last Government report shows that in 1906 the production was 240,849,994 pounds. In 1906-7 the total exports of Indian tea amounted to 236,731,623 pounds, an increase of more than 18,000,000 pounds over the previous year. Of this amount America took 16,266,000 pounds, of which 14,493,701 pounds went to Canada. Over 12 per cent. of the exports to the United Kingdom are re-exported to Europe and America. Throughout the last five years the percentage of the Indian tea crop sent to the United Kingdom has steadily diminished, while the direct exports to other countries have increased in the same proportion. The average prices obtained for the three principal grades of Indian tea at the auction sales in 1906 showed a substantial improvement over the previous two years, being 12⅔ cents, 10 7-12 cents, and 8 7-10 cents per pound respectively.

Writing from Valetta, Consul John H. Grout furnishes detailed information about the sale and consumption of butter and butterine in Malta and advice to American shippers to make an effort to sell more butter there. If prices could be arranged to offset to a certain extent freight charges, which latter would require a study of handling and most feasible routes of shipment in order to deal inteligently with the matter, there ought to be a market at Malta for American canned butter and butterine. None is produced there, and supplies for the civil population and the large military and naval forces stationed at the port at all times have to be obtained from the outside. Large quantities of butterine are consumed there. At present most of the supply comes from England. Large quantities of butter are also consumed, coming from England, Australia, Holland and Denmark. There is no duty upon either article. In addition to the numerous retail grocers there are many distributers in the shape of contractors to the army and navy. The latter purchase in large quantities, and so keen is competition prices have to be very low in order to admit of even a small margin of profit. Owing to the climate and lack of refrigerating facilities, small packages are desirable. For this reason, and in accordance with local demand, butterine arrives in tins containing 28, 14 and 7 pounds each. Wholesale prices range from $9.73 to $19.46 per hundredweight (112 pounds), according to quality. The principal brand used is that known as "Crown Head." It arrives in cases of 28 pounds, packed in parcels of 1 pound each, and retails at 14½ cents per pound. Butter arrives, when in tins, in smaller parcels. A few of the larger grocery establishments, however, are provided with refrigerators, and these often receive their supplies of butter in firkins and eve larger containers. Australian bu ter at that writing in August reta at an average price of 26 cents p pound, while Danish canned butt in 1-pound containers, is sold at cents per pound.

Consul W. H. Gale, of Puer Plata, says we could also sell mo butter in his field. Most of the bu ter now sold there is from De mark. It is packed in 1-pound ti and retails at 65 cents each. Th wholesale price to importers is cents. The duty amounts to $14.7 per quintal. The terms are si months. This butter is for tab use. A very small quantity of bu ter is imported from the Unit States. It is of inferior quality an for cooking purposes only. It packed in tins of 1 to 25 poun and retails at 40 cents per poun The wholesale price is from 18 t 23 cents per pound, according t the size of tin. The duty amoun to $14.76 per quinatl (220. pounds). The terms are ninet days.

Still speaking of American bu ter, this time in Venezuela, our Vic Consul for the Puerto Cabello di trict writes that the total amount butter imported through the loc custom house of that district dur ing the year of 1906 was valued $48,960. Germany sent $25,33 worth, and the share of the Unite States was $21,854. The duty o butter is equivalent to about 7 cents per 2.2 pounds. The duty butterine equals about 23.5 cent per 2.2 pounds. The freight on 10 pounds of butter or butterine fro New York is about 30 cents, an from Germany it is about twice tha amount, which the importer has t add to the cost price of his impor tation. The wholesale price of but ter in Germany at port of embark ing, in pound tins—the size mos popular—is 36 cents; in 2-poun tins, 33 cents, and in 14-pound tin 27 cents. In the United States it i from 18 to 27 cents per pound, ac cording to quality, and with slig variations according to quantity The Consul writes that if th American manufacturer of butterin can furnish the dealers of Venezuel with a product that is satisfactor and which can be sold more cheapl than butter after all duties hav been paid, there is no reason why demand could not be created for it not to take the place of butter, bu to establish itself as a separate com dity. The high import duty is sponsible for the fact that mer- ants there do not handle butter- , but if they could purchase it at price sufficiently reasonable to able them to pay all charges and n be able to sell it with profit, y would import it, as no preju- e exists against its use. The atively high retail price—50 nts per pound—of ordinary but- , which does not keep well in the mate, prevents it from being gen- lly used.

Wages Advance More Than Food.

deral Labor Bureau Shows That While Food Prices Last Year Have dvanced Only 2.9 Per Cent., Wages dvanced in the Same Period 4.5 Per ent. Argues That Laboring Classes etter Off Than They Were Before.

cial correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Sept. 13, 1907.

According to a statement issued s week by the Bureau of Labor, wages of the laboring men, in te of the high prices of food, ve a larger purchasing power n last year. The report shows t in the principal manufacturing l mechanical industries of the ntry average wages per hour in 06 were 4.5 per cent. higher than 1905, the regular hours of labor week were 0.5 per cent. lower, l the number of employees in the ablishments investigated was 7 cent. greater. The average full- e weekly earnings per employee 1906 were 3.9 per cent greater n in 1905.

According to the same report, ring 1906 wages were increased nerally in nearly all industries, 40 the 41 industries covered by the estigation showing some in- ase. In the industries as a ole, weighted according to im- rtance, the increase in hourly ges was 4.5 per cent.

The retail prices of food ighted according to consumption representative workingmen's nilies, were 2.9 per cent. higher 1906 than in 1905. As the ad- nce in wages per hour from 1905 1906 was greater than the ad- nce in the retail prices of food, purchasing power of an hour's ges, as measured by food, was eater in 1906 than in the preced- year. In 1906 the purchasing wer of an hour's wages as ex- nded for food was 1.4 per cent. greater than in 1905 and the purchasing power of a full week's wages was 1 per cent. greater in 1906 than in 1905, or, in other words, an hour's wages in 1906 in the manufacturing and mechanical industries of the United States would purchase 1.4 per cent. more food than an hour's wages in 1905, and a full week's wages in 1906 would purchase 1 per cent. more food than a full week's wages in 1905.

The price of food was higher in every month of 1906 than in the corresponding month of 1905. The increase over the corresponding month of the preceding year, which in February, 1906, was only 0.4 per cent., grew steadily greater throughout the year, the price in December, 1906, being 5.1 per cent. above that of the preceding December. The price in December, 1906, was 4.8 per cent. higher than the average for the year 1906, which year showed a higher average than any other year during the seventeen years, 1890 to 1906, covered by the investigation of the Bureau of Labor.

The increase in prices in 1906 over 1905 applied, in unequal degree, to 25 of the 30 articles included in the investigation. The articles which showed the greatest advance in prices are lard, 9.8 per cent.; evaporated apples, 9.1 per cent.; fresh pork, 8.8 per cent.; dry or pickled pork, 8.7 per cent.; bacon, 8.4 per cent.; ham, 7.3 per cent.; while the advance in fresh fish and mutton exceeded 5 per cent. The only articles which showed any material decrease are flour and sugar.

The articles which showed the most marked advance in prices in December, 1906, over December, 1905, are butter, 15 per cent.; lard, 13.9 per cent.; fresh pork, 12.2 per cent.; dry or pickled pork, 11.9 per cent.; bacon, 11.1 per cent., and ham, 9.8 per cent. The only articles which showed any marked decline in price in December, 1906, from the price in December, 1905, are potatoes, 5.8 per cent., and flour, 4.8 per cent.

As compared with the average for the ten-year period, 1890 to 1899, the average wages per hour in 1906 were 24.2 per cent. higher.

A Letter and a Moral

We could offer no better evidence of the esteem in which the American Slicing Machine is held by users than the daily correspondence which reaches our office.

For instance, in this morning's mail comes a letter from Mr. A. W. Thode, of Galena, Ill. He asks us: "Would you like a nice recommend? We can give one heartily, as the machine is perfect."

We did Mr. Thode a mighty good turn when we placed the machine with him. He realizes it, and being a square-deal sort of a man, he wants to let us know it.

Plenty of letters along the same lines reach us all the time.

The moral of all this is that you, you who are reading this notice, need the machine in your business.

Perhaps you've often thought of it, but never took the time to investigate.

That's what we want you to do now.

Just a card to us will bring you particulars; and sending that card to us has led thousands of your fellow merchants to a big increase in trade and profit on sliced meats.

Write us to-day.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is in fairly active condition, the demand being a steady one for actual wants. The list is steady to firm, the comparatively short supply preventing any softness in prices. The outlook is for a steady market, with no particular change in values.

Coffee.

Early in the week the market for Brazil coffees was forced up through the support of the speculative interests. Later, however, Europe declined and caused a decline of 20 to 25 points on this side. The market at present is about ¾ cent above the basis of the early summer. The trade have been forced into the market to a considerable degree as the cool season approached, owing to seasonable demands for larger stocks. The general trade shows no indication of any intention to help the speculators carry the present heavy load of spot coffee. The market for Brazil coffee options is an extremely narrow one, being confined almost to professional trading. The present position of coffee is recognized by all as a purely artificial one, and the enormous supply held by the syndicate, though in no way applicable to present market needs, is still hanging over as a threat. Mild coffees are very steady and some grades, notably Maracaibos, Caracas and Bogotas, are very firm and in small supply. Java and Mocha are steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no radical change for the week. Raws have been weak and strong by turns Europe has slumped on account of better weather conditions, but lat recovered somewhat. The Cub prospect is also being much affect by the weather, and the entire ra situation is rather uncertain. R fined sugar is unchanged for t week and in fair demand. It seer to be generally admitted that t European beet crop will be small than last year.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged Compound syrup is in fair dema Sugar syrup is in good dema both for home and export, and t market shows an advance of 1 2 cents per gallon, owing to t improved demand and in sympat with the condition of the gluc market. Molasses is about t changed. No change has occurr and no special demand is report

Fish.

The mackerel market is firm a active. Irish summer fish is abo cleaned up and the conseque scarcity has caused an advance du ing the week of $1 per barr Norway summer fish is also brin ing slightly better prices. No Norways are available as y Shore mackerel are scarce and abo out of the game. Cod, hake a haddock are dull on spot at t changed prices. The trade loaded up with future fish and demand is therefore light. Dom tic sardines are steady and t changed. There is some talk abo advancing the market to a ba of $4 for quarter oils after packing season ends, but this wo mean such a radical advance t it is scarcely credited. The prosp for French and Norwegian sardi is very firm, as the catch up to d has been very small. The seas has still 60 days more to go, ho

. Salmon is unchanged and . Deliveries of all grades will short. Prices are strong and unlikely to advance.

Canned Goods.

he tomato situation is about unged. Old spot goods still rule nd 87½ cents f. o. b., and a few goods, standard quality, have delivered at about the same re. The market is firm and to a t extent depends absolutely on weather. Corn is dull. There trading and no change in price prospect. Peas are getting ly cleaned up and anything l under $1 has again grown ce. Peaches show no unimement. The Baltimore pack is ly over, and prices are strong unchanged. Some Western crs have offered peaches durthe week at a concession of 10 5 cents per dozen from the rulmarket, but this still leaves the ket high. Spot apples have adcd to $3.75 for New York gal-

Nobody will name a price for rcs. The situation is very firm. es on Baltimore and Pennsyla apples have advanced 25 to ents in sympathy with the New k State market. The line of ll Baltimore canned goods is unged and quiet. California ied goods are in light and en supply and firm.

Dried Fruits.

he prune market is showing s of strength. The spot market robably ¼ cent stiffer, largely eeount of heavy buying and the that stocks are not heavy. ie new prunes are on the way now. The market for future ies is a little stiffer, though no al change has occurred as yet. ches show neither change nor rovement. The first new curs will arrive within the next days and are offered at ruling es. Spot currants are scarce firm. The market will ease off n new currants become more utiful. The raisin market shows change. New raisins will be pcd next week. There is no ial demand and stocks are low. icots are quiet and very high. ples are exceedingly scarce and , with 11 cents per pound being ed for futures.

Beans and Peas.

ea beans show no particular nge from last week. The marranges from $1.95 to $2. Mars have advaneed to $2.25. The look is for higher prices unless the crop proves better than is now expected. New Marrows are considered not unlikely to open around $2.50. California limas are unchanged and the demand is light. Split peas are in good demand at ruling prices. Other grades of dried peas are firm, scarce and wanted.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at the recent advance. The make is not as large as usual for the season, while the consumptive demand is very good. Prices are about 20 per cent. above normal for the season. The outlook at present is for a firm market at unchanged prices. The make of Pennsylvania butter is very short, and prints are not likely to show any change for the next few days at least.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at unchanged prices. There is a good consumptive demand and the receipts of fresh eggs are about normal for the season. The bulk of the trade is at present being supplied from storage eggs, so that no important change is likely within the next week.

Cheese.

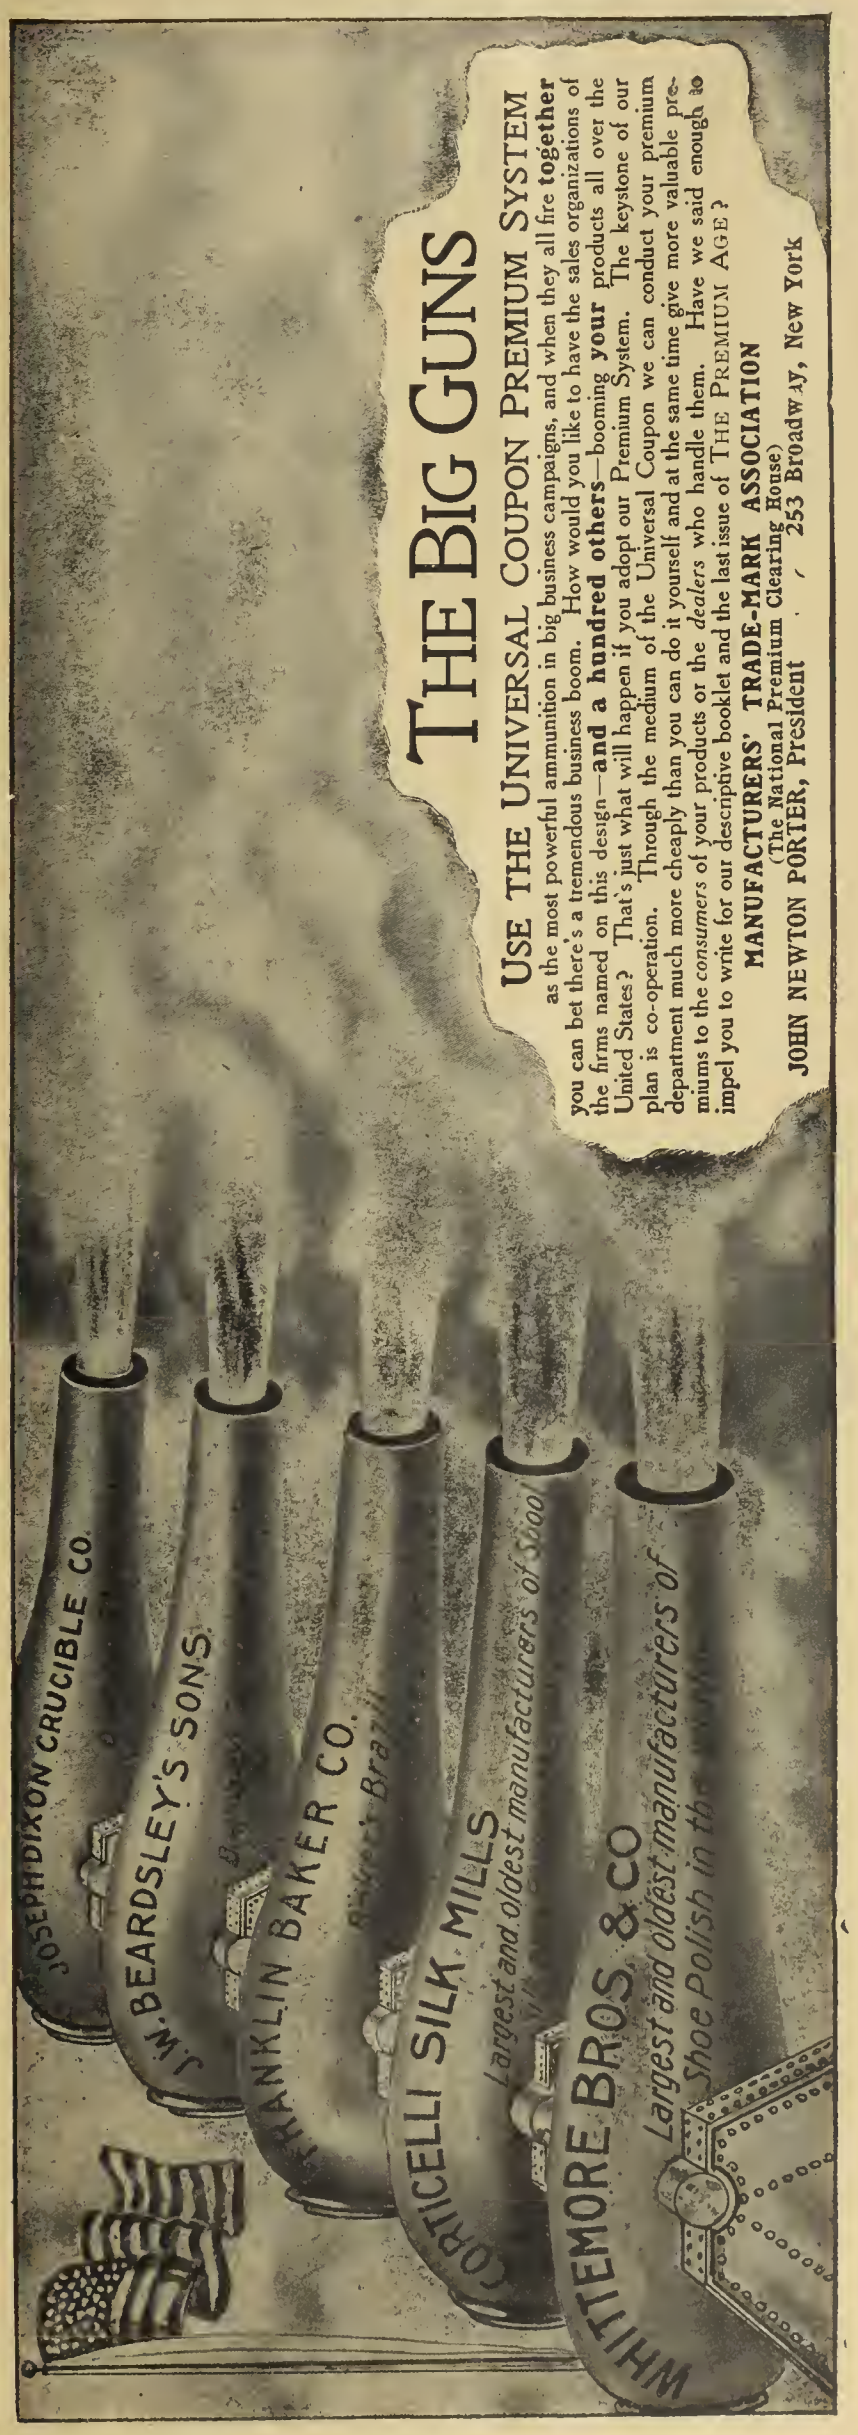
The cheese market shows an advance of ½ cent, which is general throughout the country. The make is running very short and high prices are likely from now on. The present price is 15 per cent. above a year ago, while the make is fully 15 per cent. short. The consumptive demand for cheese absorbs the receipts every day.

Provisions.

The market for smoked meats is about ¼ cent off on the entire line. The decline is wholly seasonable, and the demand is fairly active, considering the season. Stocks are about normal, and the market will likely remain stationary for the coming week. Pure lard is unchanged and is firm at the recent advance. Compound lard is unchanged, but holders are talking an advance. A scarcity is looked for, and if there is any change it will be upward. Barrel pork is unchanged, as are canned meats. Dried beef is firm at the recent advance. The demand for the full line of provisions is fully up to the standard for the season.

Produce.

White potatoes, 35 to 40 cents per basket, demand good; sweet potatoes, fancy red, 60 to 65 cents per basket; fancy yellow, 50 to 60 cents;



culls, 25 to 35 cents, demand good; eggplants, 15 to 20 cents, demand fair; cabbage, savoy, 50 to 65 cents per barrel; red, $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair; squash, 20 to 30 cents per basket, demand fair; cucumbers, 40 to 75 cents, demand fair; turnips, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand fair; string beans, 15 to 25 cents per basket, demand poor; corn, 25 to 40 cents per basket, demand good; carrots, 35 to 50 cents, demand fair; peppers, green, 25 to 30 cents per basket; red, 40 cents; cayenne 8 cents to $1 per basket, demand fair; lima beans, flat, 30 to 40 cents per basket; improved, 50 to 65 cents; shelled, 10 to 12 cents, demand good; onions, yellow, 50 cents per basket; white, $1.50 per bushel; pickling yellows, 65 to 80 cents; white, 80 cents to $1, demand fair; radishes, 1½ to 2 cents per bunch, demand fair; spinach, 75 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; watercress, 2½ cents per bunch, demand fair; celery, York State, 20 to 35 cents per bunch, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Apples, 15 to 80 cents per basket, demand good; bananas, firsts, $1.25 to $1.50 per bunch; 8-hands, 90 cents to $1.15; 7-hands, 60 to 75 cents; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents, demand poor; California oranges, $3.50 to $5 per box, demand fair to good; limes, 80 cents to $1 per 100, demand fair; lemons, $2.50 to $4 per box, demand fair; pineapples, $4.50 to $6 per box, demand poor; scarce and high.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; large jumbo, $1.65 per bushel; green peanuts, choice, 5¾ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; large jumbo, 8 cents, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, Marbots, 12½ cents per pound; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand slow.

MARKET NOTES.

The tomato market stiffened somewhat during the past week, but later declined again because the canners stopped buying. The shipment of contract tomatoes has begun, so that the packers no longer have the same need to come into the wholesale market. Late in the week the market dropped 10 to 12 cents and the price ranged from 20 to 30 cents. This is a higher range than last year, but may be only because the season is late. The crop outlook is still good.

Watermelons have slumped, owing to heavy supply, and the range is now 8 to 25 cents. The demand is draggy.

Retail dealers in food products at Pittsburg, through W. A Arbour, a produce dealer on Liberty street, have filed in the United States Circuit Court a bill in equity against the Pittsburg Produce Trade Association, which is alleged to be a monopoly in restraint of trade, violating the postal laws, and in other ways subjecting itself to the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. It is alleged that this combination of middlemen is to blame for the high prices of food products in Pittsburg and vicinity.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

St. Paul, Minn.

At the last meeting of the St. Paul Retail Grocers' Association, August 27th, President J. W. Lux referred to the public discussion of the parcels post bill, the passage of which by the next Congress will be sought. Discussion of the parcel post topic was continued, concluding with the adoption of a resolution, viz:—

As the public mind is filled with declarations coming from agents and representatives of the great retail mail order houses of Chicago and elsewhere with the boast that a parcels post bill of their dictation will be enacted by the next Congress.

We, the members of the St. Paul Retail Grocers' Association, hereby file our protest against this most vicious attempt to assault and stifle the business of the retail genera merchants.

Therefore, Be it resolved tha calling the attention to this matte of our representative in Congres from the Fourth Minnesota District Hon. F. C. Stevens, we request an urge upon him to exert all opposi tion in his power to the passage o a parcels post law, which we asser will be unjust and injurious to all o our merchants and also the genera government.

St. Louis, Mo.

After a discussion lasting nea two hours the St. Louis Retail Gr cers' Association decided at its l meeting that the best interests o vast majority of the grocers of t city would be best served by t passage of a city ordinance wh would put the lid absolutely on stores handling groceries in the ci Distinctly stating that the action the meeting did not bind the me bers of the association to close Sunday until there is a law co pelling all retailers to do the sa the members present practica unanimously indorsed a resoluti favoring the ordinance which now being pushed by the Kan City Association, with some f amendments which are called for local conditions.

It was not deemed wise to acc the offer of the Master Butche Association to co-operate with th in a legal effort to close all grocer through the provisions of the M souri State law.

Freshly Cured Beef, Soft Moist and Juicy

When neatly, nicely sliced, pleases the palates of particular people.

JOHNSON'S EVERSHARP SLICING MACHINE

The only machine made that will slice this soft, juicy, palate-pleasing beef in full size thin sandwich slices.

No waste. Slices up every scrap, however small, in thin, salable slices. Five to ten pounds of waste saved on every 100 pounds.

Saves time. 100 full size slices, thin as paper, smooth and glossy, moist, soft and delicious, piled up smooth, straight and flat like the leaves of a book, in less time than any other machine can mangle and jumble up 60 thick, rough, torn slices.

No competition. Soft, moist, cured beef sliced on an "EVERSHARP" sells itself. Once introduced the people will eat no other dried beef, no matter what form it comes in, how much it is advertised, or how cheaply it is sold.

AN EVERSHARP SLICER INSTALLED IN YOUR STORE is then refused to all your competitors, and insures you a complete monopoly of the very much enlarged entire dried beef business of your section.

Send for a sample of sandwich sliced beef and wake up to the possibilities of modern progress.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

his Department is devoted to the criticism dvertising matter sent in, to the devising ew advertising ideas for special occasions, n request, and to the suggesting of original rtisements when data is supplied. All munications sent in for this Department uld be addressed to the Editor of Science Advertising. They will be filed in their r and taken up according to strict rotation.

The picture which I reproduce s week is a good text for a little on individuality in advertising. e grocer who contributes this nple of his work does business in ga, a suburb of Philadelphia. r many months he has used this que billboard form of advertis-, changing the matter regularly. declares that there is no doubt atever that he has gotten results m this method, not only direct ults, but through getting his re talked about.

* * *

The point that I want to make ut this advertising is that it is ividual. There is nothing es-ially brilliant about it, but I uld rather use a commonplace thod of advertising which was it than a high silk hat would be to a small boy. I knew a man once who made himself a perfect laughing stock by doing this. He was a gloomy taciturn individual who never loosened up on any occasion. Somewhere he saw an advertisement written by one of these typical cheery talkers. It was written in a chatty, colloquial style that exactly denoted the personality of the man who wrote and used it. The silent merchant liked it and adopted it, though it no more fit him than a sailor hat would have done. The contrast between the man and his advertising was so ludicrous that it excited public remark. This is exactly the chance that every man takes who adopts another's method of advertising. Either he will get a style wholly unsuited to him or he will get a colorless style that suits one man as well as another because it has no individuality at all.

Every experienced and intelligent advertiser is striving in this day, above all things, for individual advertising—advertising that won't look like anybody else's. It is not hard to do this. Let every man examine himself. "What sort of a uliar to myself than a brilliant thod which everybody used. The erage retail merchant is lazy, en it comes to carving out adver-ng methods. He sees somewhere advertisement in his line of siness which he thinks clever and straightway adapts it to his own , often not even changing the rding. Now, the advertisement t he copied may have been a od advertisement, but it may e been no more adapted to the sona'ity of the man who adopted man am I?" If he is grave and dignified, his advertising should be dignified, though not prosy. If he is the hail fellow well met, he should try to infuse the same cheeriness into his advertising. Every man knows what his temperament is, and if he tries hard enough he can make his advertising fit that temperament.

Sweet potatoes are growing weaker, and range now from 65 to 70 cents. The demand is fair.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Flour Display.

In the centre of your window place a box three feet long, two feet wide and one foot deep. Cover the sides and the front with white cloth. Around the edge nail boards about three inches wide. Paint these boards yellow so as to make the box look like a counter. In back of this counter place a cardboard lady, which you can get for the asking from the N. K. Fairbank Co., New York or St. Louis. They will be only too glad to give it to you for the ad. On each side of your window build high pyramids of flour as high as possible, for this alone will draw attention. Make a sign of white cardboard, any size, with the words:—

FRESH COTTOLENE ALWAYS PLEASES

Tack this in front of your counter. Make another sign which should read:—

IT'S EASY TO ASK FOR GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

Place this card above the lady's head, with strings from each side of the window. In front of the counter place two five-pound sacks of flour and a few cans of cottolene on the top.

If this window and a little extra talk to your customers on Gold Medal won't sell the goods, I can't tell what will.

Labeling Sulphited Molasses.

Inasmuch as the Bureau of Chemistry has not determined with absolute scientific certainty just what exact percentage of sulphites might be used with safety in molasses, Secretary Wilson recently promised not to prosecute the molasses makers for working on their own basis in handling this year's crop, but he required that fact to be set forth on the labels. That made the manufacturers kick harder than before, and Representative Broussard of Louisiana, with Secretary Coffcock, of the New Orleans Sugar Growers' Association, and a delegation of molasses men went to Washington last week trying to convince the Secretary and Doctor Wylie, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, that something ought to be done for their relief.

"Your proposition would make our labels read, 'Sold under mise of Secretary Wilson not to secute,'" declared Broussard. Nevertheless, Secretary Wilson uld not change his ruling.

"Do you know what I'll do," said Colcock. "I'll advise my ple to put on their labels 'guar-eed under the pure food law,' if they do that you can't prose-e under your promise."

"Maybe not," said Doctor Wylie, t we could prosecute for im-per labels."

Secretary Wilson finally said he'd ik it over and see what could be e.

ickles Look Like a Luxury.

ctically All Prices on Bulk Goods Withdrawn. Prices on All Grades harply Advance. Bad Crop Outlook e Cause.

The pickle situation is decidedly ical. Prices have sharply advanced and practically all packers have withdrawn prices. The reason is the exceedingly short crop outlook.

The last price on 45 1200s was $9 to $9.50, which is at least $2 above the normal price. This price has since been withdrawn. The early quotation on 32 1200s was $8. This size is quoted at $10 to-day, with practically no holders willing to sell any quantity even at that. The last quotation on 40 1200s was $8.75, but it has been withdrawn and nobody now has any price Deliveries are sure to be very short.

The same condition exists as to bottled pickles. One large concern which sold early in the season at 82½ cents per dozen now asks $1.10 for them, and other grades and sizes show proportionately the same advance. It seems to be generally admitted that the pickle outlook is worse than for many years.

Your Question Answered

"Why should you go to the expense of buying Safety Ark Egg Carriers when you can do as you've done for years—put them in a bag?"

First, because it saves all the breakage. You can break eggs packed in Safety Carriers, but you won't unless you deliberately try to. Doesn't that make them worth while in itself?

Second, because it's up-to-date storekeeping to use them. That ought to commend itself to you also.

But as to "going to the expense," there is no expense to speak of. Safety Ark Egg Carriers are absurdly cheap, and it costs only a trifle more to have your advertisement printed on them.

They're a good thing, brother.

Who Gets the Returns?

When we place a page advertisement in the Ladies' Home Journal at a cost of several thousand dollars for Ralston Health Food or Purina Whole Wheat Flour, what does it do? Does it cause people to write us for these products?

No, the major effect, if the advertisement is good, is to create demands upon you and other grocers. Isn't it true that if the goods are all right, you ought to stick closest to the manufacturer who makes it easiest for you to sell his goods? Think that over.

Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour are not catch-pennies thrown together to make some money on. They are ideal year-in-and-year-out foods; bona fide to the last grain.

Says There Is Graft in Food Shows

Well-known Booth Builder Says There Is a Class of Food Sho Managers Who Take Bribes to Endorse Material Me Contends the Practice Is Grossly Against Exhibitor's I terests.

The "Grocery World" has received a statement from C. D. G. Johnson, who makes a specialty of building booths for food expositions, which charges that in the conducting of many food shows there is graft. The statement in part follows:—

> The season for food shows, expositions and fairs is here, and looking over the instigators of these affairs, we find three classes of men: the upright business man, the grafter, the man who grafts and does not know it. The first should have the support of all concerned; the second should be eliminated, and the third should be enlightened as to his wrong doing. The question arises, how?
> In launching the food show, the manager usually has offices where he solicits the commercial concerns to participate as exhibitors. Where these shows run for a week or two weeks' duration, the space sells to the exhibitors at the usual price of one dollar per square foot. The cost of placing an exhibit in these affairs is not a small thing. The rental of space, the cost of booths, lights, signs, etc., with samples, advertising matter and salaries of the attendants, bring the total cost up to a much higher point than we would imagine, and to make it a paying proposition to the exhibitors they must have the support of the management.
>
> Previous to the opening of these events, the management is called on by numerous parties representing the "Trades Crafts;" the booth builder, the decorator, the sign painter, the electrician, and the photographer. They seek Mr. Manager at his office, and each one explains, or tries to explain his particular line, and the merits pertaining to same. They each want to get in touch with the exhibitors, that they may get their patronage in the arrangement of their exhibits. The broad-minded, honest manager will push aside his papers and listen to all. He goes over the details with each one, and he considers carefully, and selects the man in every line who has convinced him as being thoroughly reliable. This man gets his endorsement, and the manager feels in doing this, that he is assisting his exhibitors by giving them an opportunity of securing the services of a competent workman, and it is a protection to the exhibitors by steering them clear of inferior workmen, who ply their trade for a matter of to-day only.
>
> The grafting manager, when the trades craft call upon him, says: "Come into my private office." Here the workman explains his work, and, after listening, the manager coolly replies: "If I give you my endorsement and support, what am I to get out of the deal?." In other words, he wants a "rake-off." He is too narrow-minded to consider future success. Get all he can now. He does not consider the merits of the workman, but he is after that little, measly per cent., and he often turns down the reliable workman with the real goods for the "rake-off," or revenue, from the inferior man. He is not thinking of or caring for the welfare of his exhibitors, who usually patronize the man of his endorsement.

Flour Miller Again Discuss Retail Grocer's Methods.

Says Retail Trade Is Always Prejudic Against Local Flour Mills. Wa Flour That Comes from Outsi "Spring Wheat" Frauds.

Mr. D. Waugh, the Weste flour miller who not long ago cri cised the profit made by retail gr cers on flour, and compared it u favorably with his own, is out aga with a statement in the "Americ Miller." He says:—

> I have always been a friend to the retail dealers and have been selling them flour for about forty years, but it seems I must not say anything about what is a reasonable profit for handling the flour Now, when a dealer buys flour it is his, and he can make his own price and I am not allowed to make any suggestions; but when I go to sell flour he quotes the lowest priced flour that comes to town and expects me to meet competition, regardless of grade or quality It is an undisputed fact that the grocery trade is prejudiced against a local flour mill, and why? Just because each dealer wants a flour that the other fellow doesn't have; consequently the wheat must be shipped away and the flour shipped back ostensibly as spring wheat flour.
> I will mention a case that came under my notice some time ago. A man had a country store on the railroad and was handling a flour made not far away. He was also selling a spring brand of flour from a wholesale grocer. It was a very good flour, but came at a bigger price. One day he happened to be in the mill where he got his winter wheat flour and saw the empty sacks branded "Spring Wheat Flour." Now, this flour had to be shipped right by his store to the city and back again. The next time he saw the proprietor he told him he would not buy any more from him, as he knew where it was made and could get it much cheaper at the mill.

239 Live Merchants read this Advertisement last week and placed their orders for these remarkable goods. Think of 239 orders from one advertisement in a trade paper. This is conclusive evidence that the average merchant knows a good thing when he sees it. We repeat the advertisement this week for the benefit of the merchants who did not read it last week. Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Hollands Gin.

Also known as Schiedam, Geneva, or Dutch gin. These are all rich, soft, oily, mellow and aromatised varieties of gin, distilled mostly at Schiedam, in Holland, and exported to this country both in cask and in old-fashioned dark-colored square bottles, which are usualy packed in cases with hemp husks. Hollands gin is generally made from two parts of the best unmalted rye, one part of malted bigg, ground to a coarse meal and flavored with juniper berries. The distillers most noted for Hollands add a little pure Strasburg turpentine and a handful or two of hops to the spirit along with the juniper berries before rectification.

At Rotterdam sweet fennel seed is commonly added, while at Weesoppe, Strasburg turpentine and fennel seeds, or essential oil of fennel, are often substituted for a large portion of the juniper berries.

Hominy.

A popular American food made from white Indian corn or maize.

The maize is hulled or broken and more or less coarsely ground and sifted. It is afterwards prepared for the table by adding milk or water and boiling.

Horse-radish.

The pungent and stimulating root of the perennial herbaceous plant Cochlearia armoracia, a species of scurvy grass.

This root contains a volatile oil very similar to mustard oil, with about 30 per cent. of sulphur, and is one of the most effective anti-scorbutics known. Horseradish provokes the appetite and aids digestion. It is usually scraped raw and used as an accompaniment to roast beef, both as a condiment and garnish, the taste of it being warm and pungent like mustard.

St. Louis, Mo., Authorities Against Preservatives.

The Health Department of the City of St. Louis, Mo., is about to take measures against all persons using preparations known as "Frostine," "Iceine," "Preservaline," "Frigerine" and "Preservo." The Commisssioner bases his order on the report of Acting City Chemist Otto A. Daudt, who branded all the preparations "Injurious and detrimental to the public health."

The order was sent to F. X. M hall, Chief City Meat Inspector, structing him to order all usi these or similar preparations as fo preservatives to cease doing so once under penalty of prosecuti In his report regarding the pres vatives, which he examined, M Daudt says: "The sample known 'Frostine' consists of sulphite sodium. The action of the sulph on meat appears to be threefold. undoubtedly checks the growth organisms, preserves the red co of the meat and acts as a deodora thereby masking the odor of composition. The effect of the a dition of the sulphite to the me on the human subject, is to ca eructations of sulphur dioxide g unpleasant taste, vomiting with d comfort, oppression and headac lasting several hours. In additi to these subjective symptoms, th is reason to believe that sulphi are liable to cause organic chan in the abdominal organs, especia the kidneys, even though sympto of poisoning are not at once ma fested. Samples of 'Iceine,' 'P servaline,' 'Frigerine' and 'P servo' are equally as injurious a detrimental to the public health."

Hams That Always Sell

There is another sort of ham much less preferred to the absolutely unidentified and unbranded ham, and that is the ham of the packer who gets good raw material to-day and poor to-morrow.

Both of these kill the grocers' trade, because they are so irregular. They please his customers to-day and provoke them to-morrow. No trade can last long under hot and cold applications.

Swift's PREMIUM Hams are always regular. We have the pick of the hogs of the whole country and hence we can keep the quality even the whole year through. Swift's PREMIUM Hams hold and increase trade.

The Selling Age.

I heard something from a grocer t week which made me realize ore deeply than ever what a sell-g age we're in. They say there's stone age and an iron age, but, by d, this is the selling age—the age ien the man who can sell things king.

This particular grocer was shed into the grocery business thout much say. By trade he's engraver. He married a girl ose father had a prosperous tle store in West Philadelphia.
ne day about two years ago the l fellow—nice old man he was—d a stroke which put him down d out. There was nobody to ke hold of the business but the n-in-law, and he up and did it.
He didn't want to do it. Told me after he'd been in it for about ne months. I didn't think he'd y in. He was a thoughtful felw, a great one to sit down and ink things out. I tried to perade him to settle down and make his mind to stay in.

"It's a good business," I said; ou'll get used to it after a while d I'm sure you'll like it. You n make more out of it than you n at engraving. Besides that, ho is there to run the thing but ou?"

"Well," he said, "it would be difrent if I was cut out for it, but n not. I don't get much pleasure om mixing with people, and that's actly what a busines man needs do."

As I say, I really didn't expect would stay in. I didn't see him gain until last week, when I hapned to be passing his store and ent in. It was a new place. He d torn a part of the house out d given himself more store room, d he had put in new fixtures and proved it in dozens of ways.
ad more clerks than he used to ve, too.

"Well, I see you stayed in," I id when I finally got at him.

"Oh, yes," he said, "and I'm glad did now."

"Why the place is wonderfully proved," I said. "What have ou done to it?"

"Well," he replied, "I've got a pretty good thing here now. I'm putting $50 away in bank every week, outside of everything including household expenses. You remember the last time I saw you, I was talking about pulling out. Well, one night, I think it was the very next week after that, I sat down to work the thing out. Was I to stay in or wasn't I? I felt that I hadn't made good at all. I couldn't warm up to meeting people and selling goods. I had never done it and I really didn't know how. I decided that that was the reason I didn't like the business—because I couldn't sell goods, and the reason I couldn't sell goods was because I didn't know how to approach people. So I began to figure out whether there was any way I could learn to approach people, and I thought I'd try it. So I did; I tried it the very next day. Instead of hiding in the back of the store when a customer came in, in hopes one of the clerks would wait on her, I butted right in and forced myself to wait on everybody I could. I tried to sell the goods, too; that is, I did all I could to persuade a customer—see? There's a rule about it, I thought, and the rule can't be anything but simply telling the points of the goods to the people that you wanted to buy them. It was hard work at first—I'm no talker. But I worked hard at it, and I'll bet any clerk here will tell you to-day that I'm the best salesman in the store. It's all rot about the salesman being born. Nobody could be less cut out for one than I was. I simply went at it and reasoned it out, and I won out. There's no secret about selling goods. Here are the goods and here is the customer. What shall you say to make the customer want the goods? Simply tell her why you think she ought to have 'em; that's all. If your reasons are any good, you've got her."

By George, I think that fellow has done a wonderful thing! He saw, all right—that in order to get ahead he had to become a producer—a man who sold goods. He taught himself the selling faculty and he's a success to-day.

It's the salesman's age, all right. The man who can sell goods, either on the street or in a retail or wholesale store, is surer of a job to-day than anybody else I can think of! He's wanted. He's a producer—he brings business—he helps to carry the load. Not one minute need he

As an extraordinary precaution we have every pound of it inspected by the official inspector of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange. He looks it over with the utmost closeness—examines it for every phase of quality and after he's through grades it "extra," the highest grade known to the butter trade.

give to worrying over his living—if he's a real salesman a dozen hands will be stretched out for him all the time.

I looked over the want ads. in one of the Philadelphia papers last Sunday. How many ads. do you think there were for salesmen? Just 32! And only one salesman advertising for a job! Why, some of those ads. for salesmen held out inducements that were actually glittering. "One of our men makes $5,000 a year," one of the ads. said. Another one read "$3,000 a year to the right man."

And that's the point—there's no limit to the salary of a salesman to-day except his own ability. He makes his own limit entirely. Any firm on earth will pay him according to the goods he sells, if it's at the rate of a million dollars a year. All he needs to do is to produce—produce! If he gets $25 a week and sells $50,000 a year, he can get $50 a week next year if he sells $100,000. And if he raises it still further to $200,000 he can get $100 a week, and so on up to any old figure.

I tell you what's the truth, that if money was my only object I'd rather be a good salesman to-day than anything else on earth in the business line. And if I were a bum salesman I'd never rest day or night until I'd made myself a crack-a-jack!

It can be done, you know, if you go ahead and do it.

Another action instituted in Pittsburg last week in the United States Circuit Court is expected to force the Federal authorities to take action in the fight of retail dealers against the Pittsburg Trade Association, which is declared by retailers to be a combination in restraint of the produce trade. W. H. This action is expected to lead to an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Forty of the largest wholesale dealers in the city are named as defendants.

Dr. George E. Conrad, one of Johnstown's most prominent physicians, publicly stated last Tuesday that much of the gastric and intestinal derangement so alarmingly common in that city just now is due, not to the action of so-called ptomaines in food, but largely to the quality of California fruit offered for sale there. Dr. Conrad believes that if the State Health Board begins an investigation of the local conditions of foodstuff sale it should without fail pay attention to some dangerous almost criminal, practices of the California Fruit Trust "Oranges and ordinarily bananas are healthful and contain nothing deleterious," said Dr. Conrad, "but fruit of a thin skin coming from California at this time of the year are little less than rank poison. Take a pear, for instance, or a C fornia plum. Out in that coun the growers first wash all th fruits and then dip them in a so tion. Some of them even inject preservative into the fruit. Two Questions.

Troy, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1907.

ditor "Grocery World."

Question Department.

Dear Sir:—From watching the uestions of others in your depart- ent, we take the notion to ask a w ourselves. We know a case here an inspector for the pure od law, upon a storekeeper declin- g to sell him certain goods upon s shelves, walked behind the unter, took such of the goods as wanted and carried them away r analysis. Our inclination, and think our course of action, would to throw him out bodily. What your advice in this matter, vital all grocers?

We are having much trouble this ar from creamery butter spoiling the customer's hands, like reno- ted. Seems fine when we cut it. e are paying 26½ and 27 cents om the largest commission deal- s in this vicinity. Did not use to ve this bother. What shall we to obviate it?

If we make complaint and get e lot that keeps, next lot will oil. What is the trouble?

Yours truly,

B.

Under the New York State food w an inspector is given the right enter all buildings and break en packages, if necessary, in order take samples, but must render oper return for them. You would ve the right to forcibly eject him ovided he did not produce proper edentials showing himself to be an spector; otherwise it would be a sky business.

As to the butter, you have been tting poor goods. If creamery tter is good and properly taken re of, there is no reason why it ould spoil. The fault is wholly ith the quality.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 12, 1907.

ditor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We have to report a oderate, active market for the eek. There is a good demand om the jobbing trade. There has en some heavy speculative trading nutmegs. Otherwise conditions e practically unchanged.

Pepper.—Spot demand strong and practically unchanged prices. Lampong is in big demand.

White Pepper.—Stocks of all grades small. The demand is very good at present prices, which are exceedingly low.

Cayennes.—All grades in very good demand. Prices are firmer.

Cloves are rather quiet and a trifle firmer, due, we think, to higher prices abroad.

Pimento (Allspice).—Jamaica holders are offering sparingly. Spot holders are not anxious sellers at present market values. There is a heavy shortage in crop and it looks to us like higher prices will rule during this fall and winter.

Mace continues scarce and the demand is increasing.

Nutmegs are weak, but practically unchanged. The present is without question the time to buy, as we consider nutmegs good property at present values.

Gingers are somewhat firmer. Jamaicas still high.

Green Ginger Root.—Now arriving freely and in good steady demand, which should continue for sixty days.

Seeds.—Celery is up about an ⅛. Caraway is firmer and is now held at 7¾ cents. Coriander seed advancing slightly and much higher prices are looked for.

Yours truly,

McCormick & Co.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 13, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—It looks like there is an active market ahead of us for nearly all lines of staple canned goods. The month of September is usually the largest month in point of sales in the whole year in this market, and this month will probably prove to be no exception This week the leaders in activity were tomatoes and apples. The continued buying of tomatoes, chiefly for prompt shipment, causes a firm market for that article. The weather turned warm and seasonable early in the week, and under its influence the tomato crop should be greatly benefited if it continues next week. It is entirely a question of weather conditions during this month as to the course of the tomato market, and one man's guess is as good as another's in that direction. The vines are luxuriant and full of green tomatoes ready to ripen up if the weather is favorable. The receipts of raw tomatoes during the week were no larger than in the week previous, causing a continuation of the high prices for canning purposes. The developments during the next ten days or two weeks will be of more than usual importance.

The apple market closed last week with no indication of the activity and quick advance in prices that developed immediatcly at the opening on Monday. As if by some prearranged plan buying orders were wired in from nearly all sections and found a market well sold up, with smaller receipts of the fresh fruit at higher cost. Consequently the prices of the canned article advanced rapidly and continued to harden up to the closing. Nearly every crop this season has been a disappointment.

Comparatively few articles were entirely inactive this week. All the staples were fairly active, and nearly all the other articles in the list, some to a limited extent only, shared in the demand. The receipts of peaches have not increased. No new pears will be canned until late in this month, or carly in October, and no prices are made for them yet. New lima beans are coming in, but are too high yet for canning. Blackberries and string beans are strong.

Yours truly,

Thos. J. Meehan & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md.; Sept. 13, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—There are practically no future tomatoes being offered. Packing, both in Baltimore and the country, is going on very slowly. Reports are conflicting. Some of them say that if there is good weather during the balance of this month and the early part of October there will be a big pack. Others say that considerable damage has already been done by blight and unfavorable weather conditions so far, and that even should frost hold off there will be a shortage in the pack. Just at this time we believe the less said about the tomato situation the better. There is certainly a large acreage, and if the weather conditions continue good throughout this month a good many tomatoes are going into cans. There is a heavy demand for tomatoes in sight, however, both from packers who are sold short and from the trade, and the outlook appears to be for a healthy market under any circumstances.

Packers have been working on apples for a short time and orders are coming in very freely for them —in fact, a good deal faster than the goods can be packed, and this is causing an advance in the market. The market closes at 95 cents to $1 per dozen for No. 3s and $3 to $3.10 per dozen for No. 10s.

Squash—Pumpkin—Packing has been light so far.

Pie-grated pineapple is in good demand, but is nearly cleaned up in this market. Other grades are held in light supply.

Corn.—The market is somewhat firmer and a little higher. Offerings of future corn are limited and the outlook for the crop is reported not very satisfactory.

Peaches.—The situation is unchanged. A few peaches are being

Are You One of the Silly Ones?

In any year when a future canned goods contract is of any use at all, it is important that you should get all you bought. That is the only reason why you bought ahead —to protect yourself against a shortage.

Isn't it silly then to allow your future protective contract to be wholly neutralized by letting your jobber deliver what he pleases? If you are not to get what you bought, why buy ahead at all?

You can get all you bought by buying Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods. We give your jobber 100 per cent. contracts on them, and he can give it to you.

packed from day to day, but not enough to cause any change in the market; in fact, prices still show an upward tendency.

A few sweet potatoes have been packed here, but not enough to amount to anything. The heavy packing of sweet potatoes will hardly be on until the latter part of this month or some time in October. We are quoting No. 3 standards for Baltimore delivery at 90 cents per dozen, less 1½ per cent.

Beans.—Both string and wax are in good, strong shape. The expected decline in the market has so far not taken place; in fact, prices are being firmly maintained. The demand continues good.

One Issue in a Bird's-eye View.

Sharon Hill, Pa., Sept. 12, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The addresses and whole proceedings in the "Grocery World" of September 2d are being read and discussed among the trade.

Mr. Appel's is worth reading over and over again and then heeding. His statement that sometime in the future business will be from 10 to 4 has raised quite a discussion.

There was a new move made in the holiday closing line last Monday in West Philadelphia. A certain boarding house has as boarders a large number of mechanics. When they assembled for dinner Monday evening one of their number acted as spokesman and asked the landlady if she "dealt at a certain store" (which is a large one and has several branches). She replied, "I do all my buying of them." Well, said the spokesman, "if you want to retain us as boaders you will have to transfer your dealing to another store." "Why?" she asked. "Simply because they kept their store open all day to-day." She saw they were determined so she promised and has transferred her account, which was a large one. So, boys, have an eye on Labor Day.

Another article, viz: "Stroller's" on religious hypocrites has created considerable talk. Some few are enjoying it, but many, and some of them non-professors, are denouncing it, as they contend he has only picked out individuals to suit his case, and no doubt he knows of many consistent Christians.

How about "Aunt Mary?"

We all realize our weakness and come far short of our "high calling." The Pharisees and hpyocrites are to be looked upon with pity. But the Publican and good Samaritan should receive our highest praise.

"'Stroller's" article reminds me of a grocer who wanted some bins made and gave the job to a man who professed to be a carpenter, because he owed him a bill. When the bins were completed it was a case of lumber spoiled.

A certain man who lived in the neighborhood and really was a first-class carpenter came in this store, saw the bins and censured the grocer for hiring such a man. He stated that as he was idle he would make a job of it for him for pastime. The grocer agreed and the carpenter brought his tools and made a neat job of the bins. He praised his own work and denounced the first man.

Now, this carpenter was a man who was continually picking flaws in the life of Christians, and his excuse for not attending church was that, "if you call them Christians, then I will not belong."

The grocer, knowing the man, brought up church people and he came over his regular criticism and statement.

"Then," said the grocer, "this first man calls himself a carpenter, why don't you throw away your tools and leave the trade?" "You come in here and show me what a carpenter is, why don't you come into the church and show us how to be Christians?" For answer he picked up his tools and went home. He was easier on church members afterward, but did not remain in the town long. Quit carpentering and bought a farm.

Yours truly,
T. H. M. TOWNSEND.

AMONG THE TRADE.

From the present outlook the situation in condensed milk is likely to be just about as bad next winter as it was last. Prospects point to the same extreme scarcity and high prices, on account of shortage in the milk supply. The cost of feed is so high that farmers claim they cannot afford to keep cows.

The indictment of Samuel J. McKnight, a feed dealer who was charged with violating the act to prevent the adulteration and regulate the sale of concentrated foodstuffs; that is, animal foods, was quashed by Judge Audenried on Tuesday last, in the Philadelphia Criminal Court, on the ground that the act was unconstitutional. McKnight sold 100 pounds of bran without a stamp certifying that it was up to the required standard, thus violating the law. The Judge held that as such a certificate was not required from flour millers the act controvened the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which provides that no State "shall deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law." "The law," said the Judge, "should have given to all feed dealers equal protection as to the flour millers."

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

X.—Tending to Your Own Business.

It is a mighty good rule to never talk about a competitor.

There is a little bit of logic which says: A wise man talks about the virtues of that which he has to sell, a vain man talks about himself, and a fool talks about his competitor.

There is never a cent made by telling your customers what a competitor is doing. If they insist on telling you what he is doing, it is a good policy to listen to it all, and then when it comes time for you to express an opinion, merely pass the matter over as of little consequence and proceed to interest them in what you are selling.

So long as you have the ear of the customer, you have the advantage over all competition, and it is your duty to proceed to fill that ear with the kind of information which will convince its owner that he must buy the identical thing which you have to sell, not only because it will exactly fill his needs, but because he wants to buy it of you, so you can get the benefit from his trading. That is the feeling everyone who sells goods should strive to create. It makes no difference what your competitor says, when you once create that feeling, and you can only succeed in accomplishing this object by concentrating your entire attention on the matter in hand, forgetting all about your competitor, and letting him take care of himself, while you land the order.

The little round eraeker with "Exton" stamped on it. It has been on the market over half a eentury, and no consumer will use any other oyster eracker if she can get the Exton, beeause no oyster craeker can take its place in the esteem of those who know the difference between fair and good.

Manufacturers who have adopted premium sehemes to ereate a demand for their products, have always given the premiums to consumers. Where manufacturers have offered an ineentive to grocers to push their goods, the incentive has always been small. It had to be small, because no individual manufacturer could afford to give a grocer from his individual profits anything more important than a silk hat, an umbrella, et But when twenty or more prominer manufacturers, whose products are sol by grocers everywhere, set aside a pa of their advertising appropriations to pu into a fund to buy something substanti for the merchant, that something repre sents an artiele of sufficient value t make it worth the grocer's while to tak a real interest in pushing the goods c the manufacturers who take this mean of showing their appreciation of the gr cer's services. That the importance c this matter may be plain to you, figur out the following: The Knickerbocke Chocolate Co., New York, gives you quantity of Universal coupons with thei Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford an Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better good ever eame into this market. Add thes coupons to the ones you get with th products of the following firms and yo will find you can save enough coupon in three months to entitle you to a firs class set of harness, a platform seale c a roll-top desk. In six months you ca save enough to get a good runabout, i a year a good piano:

The American Premium Co., Philade phia; Wrigley Manufacturing Co., Phila delphia; Franklin Baker Co., Philade phia; the Porcela Co., Philadelphia; Mc Canna & Fraser Co., Philadelphia; Joh Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Weber Loesch, Philadelphia; Wm. Dreydoppel Sons, Philadelphia; J. W. Beardsley Sons, New York; Dixon Crucible Co Jersey City; Sea Foam Baking Powde Co., New York; Flodon Manufacturin Co., Boston, Mass.; Potter & Wrighting ton, Boston, Mass.

Within a month a number of othe big local houses will join this enterpris Don't you think this matter is importa enough for you to push the goods c these firms? Don't you think th manufacturers who have been been fir to recognize the grocer's right of con sideration should have the grocer hearty co-operation?

"THE BOTTOM AS GOOD AS THE TOP"

Our Apelpi Evaporated Apples are a prime grade of New York fruit, selected from the best flavored and matured apples.

The square cartons are lined with waxed paper and their contents are guaranteed to be as fine as anything in the market.

Every piece of fruit is hand picked and must be perfect before it goes into our machines.

The result is a product for which the demand is not only enormous, but constantly growing.

H. COWAN & SON Distributers — 28 So. Front Street Philadelphia, Pa.

We Are Going to Show How You Can Increase Your Trade at an Expense You Can Afford

Why is Willow Grove Park lighted by countless thousands of electric bulbs?

Why are Coney Island's Parks illuminated in the same way?

Why do all amusement places, department stores, and other big business enterprises spend such enormous sums for light? There is only one answer—to attract the people. Their success depends entirely on attracting the people. Doesn't yours? Why can't you take a leaf out of their book? If light brings them trade, won't it bring trade to you?

Did you ever stop to consider that you could illuminate your window in such a way that it would be sure to "attract the people"—and that if you get one new customer a day through it, the expense will be paid for a month. We will show you how it can be done if you will write or phone us.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

It Collected $570 In Two Days

R. J. Magill has one of the finest Grocery Stores in the City of Buffalo. This letter should interest you:—

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 16, 1907.

To Whom it May Concern:—

When I purchased a 200 Account McCASKEY REGISTER, I certainly knew it had some excellent qualities. I started it on Friday, May 3. On Saturday my four clerks took their orders with the McCASKEY ORDER BOOK COVER AND PADS, and the goods went out with the ONE WRITING the clerks took from the customers on the road, and I was only ten minutes late. This was certainly grand on the first Saturday. I was afraid some of my customers would object to their accounts being totaled, but instead I WAS COMPLIMENTED ON THE SYSTEM—not one objection. IT COLLECTED IN TWO DAYS $570, that I would not have had in three months. If the ladies in the grocery stores only knew the great value of the McCaskey System they would have it shipped by express and not by freight.

MRS. R. J. MAGILL.

MAKE MONEY
WITHOUT WORKING FOR IT

The difference between the Ariosa proposition and other package coffees: With the others you create the demand and get your profit on what you sell and that's all. With Ariosa the demand is already created everywhere, so you get your profit without working for it and in addition the vouchers coming to you with every case will be exchanged for almost anything you may need in your home or store.

Is This How You Buy Sardines?

Do you adopt a certain brand of domestic Sardines, as you do in other lines, and stick to it?

Or do you buy any old brand offered you at a price?

If you do the latter thing, you have the reason why your trade on domestic Sardines has simply been with people who wanted a cheap Sardine regardless of quality. You can never push Sardines hard and enthusiastically when you buy them hit-or-miss.

If you will stock up St. Croix Sardines you will have something good enough to push hard and recommend, and the result will probably be 100 per cent. increase in your sales.

We use the old method of drying and frying in oil—the best fish, packed by the cleanest, finest methods.

Packed in ¼ oils and ¾ mustards.

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

L&S Pickles

L. & S. Pickles are only one of many brands of sweet pickles on the market—why should you push them instead of the others?

A natural question, and here's the answer: L. & S. Pickles are preserved with granulated sugar. Many, many brands—it wouldn't be fair to specify—are sweetened with saccharine, a harmful chemical substance made from coal tar! Besides the harmfulness, saccharine only sweetens on the outside anyway; sugar goes clear to the heart of the pickle and preserves it through and through.

That's why you should choose L. & S. Pickles.

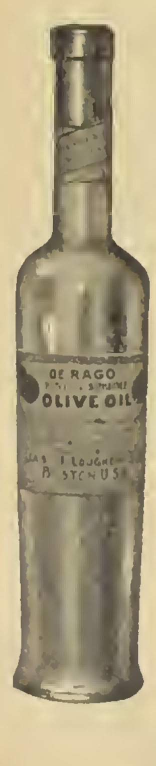
It's Different

WE'LL TELL YOU WHY



Olive Oil isn't like granulated sugar—just the same no matter who you get it from. While the many Olive Oils on the market are made in most instances from olives, so are many hats made of straw, but some are better than others. That's the way with De Rago. Every bottle of De Rago Olive Oil is the juice of perfect hand-picked olives. We don't use the specked or imperfect olives and therein lies the difference. This is the reason doctors recommend De Rago Olive Oil for sick people and children. If you want to sell more Olive Oil—sell De Rago.

Why Beans Are Best Body-builders for Children

Because Beans are richer in Proteid than the best Beefsteak, which costs three times their price.

Beef contains 20 pounds of this body-building Proteid in every 100 pounds.

Beans contain 23 to 24 pounds of this same nitrogenous Proteid in every 100 pounds.

Beans as ordinarily cooked have serious handicaps.

Their texture is so dense and close that the digestive juices of the stomach cannot penetrate them freely enough to digest them fully—and so a large part of their most valuable body-building is lost.

This is why the "Snider Process" of cooking Beans became necessary. The "Snider Process" not only eliminates the excess of sulphur, but renders the Beans more porous, and so twice as digestible as they could possibly be without this process.

This Has It

Foreigners have a knack of preparing food specialties with a flavor that we on this side can't seem to get. Take Bismarck Heringe, a canned fish specialty that we import, and whose packing we control. It is cured in pure vinegar and pure spices, and nothing else, and has an enticing flavor that brings back the consumer time and time again.

There is nothing like it in this country, and if you want something exclusive, you ought to put it in.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

Pennsylvania Food Commissioner Foust Has Not Decided Against Sulphured Fruits

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust Writes to the New York Dried Fruit Association a Letter Which Intimates an Intention to Prosecute Fruits Containing Sulphur Regardless of Federal Attitude But Will Not Decide Finally Until Coming Week. Chances of Success.

Now that the status of dried fruits bleached with sulphur is about settling itself under the Federal food law, signs of trouble under the Pennsylvania State food law are looming up. In a nutshell, the Federal position toward sulphured dried fruit—and every pound of California dried fruit is sulphured—is that the use of 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. will be permitted until further notice, and that fruits of the present crop will not be prosecuted even if they contain more than 35-1,000 of 1 per cent.

The position of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department has not been stated with absolute precision as yet, but what it promises to be may be gathered from the following correspondence, which has just passed between Food Commissioner Foust and the Dried Fruit Association of New York:—

September 10, 1907.
Mr. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:—Our members are advised by some of their customers that your agents are collecting samples of California dried fruit, and ask us if the goods comply with your State law.

We presume you are aware that practically all California dried fruit in which the fumes of sulphur have been used in preparation contain a quantity of sulphur dioxide in excess of that permitted under F. I. D. 76.

You are probably also aware that California growers claim that it is impracticable for them to dry their fruit and place it on the market in merchantable condition, and at the same time comply with the F. I. D. mentioned, and on account of those claims and as a result of an investigation made by the United States Department of Agriculture, it is generally understood that the Department will not enforce F. I. D. 76 on this season's pack.

We feel satisfied that we can safely handle the product of California for this season as far as the national law is concerned. Will you be good enough to advise us what policy you will follow in the matter?

We would thank you for a prompt reply, and oblige. Yours truly.
DRIED FRUIT ASSN. OF NEW YORK.

Harrisburg, Sept. 13, 1907.
Dried Fruit Association, 6 Harrison Street, New York.

Gentlemen:—In reply to your letter of September 10, would say that I have inclosed a copy of the new Pennsylvania Pure Food Law, together with copy of rules and regulations relating to the same.

You will find that Rule 2 is plain and gives the information you desire. I do not think that sulphurous acid should be allowed in any article of food. We have had many cases in Pennsylvania where it was used as a preservative and never had any trouble in securing convictions.

Trusting this information will be satisfactory, I remain, very truly yours,

JAMES FOUST.

It will be noted that the Commissioner's reply does not say specifically that California dried fruits containing sulphur will be prosecuted, if they contain simply the Federal minimum, or if they contain more than the minimum. In an effort to induce the Commissioner to be specific, the writer wired him as follows: "Regarding letter to Dried Fruit Association, please wire specifically whether prosecutions will be brought against dried fruits containing minimum of sulphur."

The following reply was received: "Dried fruits matter will be taken up next week and carefully considered."

Rule 2, referred to in the Commissioner's letter, is as follows:—

> The use of boric acid, salicylic acid or sulphites in meats or other articles of food wil be regarded as an adulteration and treated accordingly. Any poisonous or deleterious preservative or coloring matter applied externally which has been permitted to permeate or penetrate the meat or other food product, or any portion thereof, will be regarded as an adulteration.

It is not believed that the Pennsylvania Commissioner's attitude, if that can be assumed to be an intent to prosecute sulphured fruits, regardless of Federal immunity, will be pressed, in view of the many difficulties surrounding its enforcement. To begin with, Rule 2 is not the law, but only a regulation devised for carrying out the law. It is an open question whether it agrees with the law. In a prosecution brought against a sample of dried fruit containing sulphur the department would have to prove two things to be successful: First, that the use of sulphur in the given case was not protected by the Federal regulations. Food decision No. 76 permits the use of 35-1,000 of 1 per cent., as stated, and the Pennsylvania law specifically provides that no prosecution shall be begun against goods in conformity with the Federal regulations. Second, that the amount of sulphur contained in the sample at issue was injurious to health. So far as the writer's information goes, proving this would be extremely difficult, as many authorities believe the contrary.

We Are Going to Have Record Butter Prices.

Scarcity and High Prices of Milk and Competition for It from Condenseries Will Force Prices Very High. Very Little Storage Butter to Depend On. Butter Already Much Above Normal September Basis. Expected to Import Fancy Danish Butter This Year.

All prospects point to extremely high prices for butter during the coming fall and winter. Already the price is much above normal.

The moving cause in the expected high prices will be the scarcity of milk. The demand from condenseries is and will be very heavy, and at the present time the Borden Co. is paying in New York State a rate for milk which is equivalent to almost 50 cents per pound for the butter fat contained in it. For milk to be sold for fresh consumption a price of $2 per can and $14 per can for cream is being asked and paid every day. All these prices are far above normal. They apply particularly to New York State, where the weather has been unusually dry, but the conditions in other districts are little better.

With such prices as the above the creameries cannot compete at all, which means that the available supply of milk will go to the condenseries instead of the creameries.

For two other reasons there is expected to be a general scarcity of milk during the coming winter. The first is the very high price of feed, which makes keeping cattle expensive, and the other is the high price of beef, this tempting the farmers to sell their cows for slaughter instead of keeping them for their milk. All these influences seem sure to make milk unprecedentedly high and butter high with it. The saving factor of the fresh butter market—the storage supply—is this year only partially available, as the supply of butter stored this year was far below normal. The average jobber has none to speak of, and even this he is already commencing to withdraw on account of the scarcity of fresh butter. Already extra fancy butter is quoted at 36 cents per pound, which is several cents above normal.

Unless there is some relief from present conditions, and it is not seen where relief can come from, we will probably import fancy butter this year, which will have no precedent for many years. Already some Siberian butter is coming in, but it is only packing stock. It will probably be necessary this winter to bring in some high grade Danish butter, and if the prices of our own product remain where they are the Danish butter can pay the 6 cents tariff and still compete with domestic goods. No American butter has been exported up to this time, which is correspondingly unusual.

The New Canadian Food Law.

The new Canadian pure food act will be enforced by a staff of forty inspectors, who will exercise a close supervision over all the large packing establishments and canneries of fish, fruit and vegetables. For the present that part of the law relating to meat inspection only will be enforced. The law provides that every animal must be inspected before being killed. Only healthy animals may be killed for use. Condemned animals must be destroyed. After a healthy animal has been killed for packing the carcass must again be inspected, and only those approved can be packed or prepared for sale. Condemned animals or carcasses have to be "tanked," cooked by steam for four hours, and, if necessary, treated with a dye, to prevent being used as a food. Every carcass found fit for food must be stamped with the crown and the words "Canada Approved" and the establishment number. Sausages, canned meats, and portions intended for cure may be prepared only from carcasses which have passed inspection and which on reinspection are found fit for food. No food product shall con-ain deleterious substance, dye or lrug, or preservative. All cans and packages shall be subject to inspection during the whole course of preparation and packing, and shall be marked with the name and address of the packer and a full and correct description of the contents of the package. No package shall bear any mark which falsely represents the quantity, weight, contents, or date of the package. Every package must be marked with the crown and the words "Canada Approved." Carcasses from the United States marked "U. S. Inspected and Passed," can be packed after they have passed another Canadian inspection, but before that s done they will have to undergo he Canadian Government inspection to guard against possible deterioration.

Rolled Oats Now at Highest Point in Years.

Staple Price Now $7.10 per Barrel in Large Way. Oat Crop Slightly More Than Half Normal. Advertised Brands Will Also Have to Advance.

Since rolled oats have reopened he market has advanced to a point far ahead of any basis ruling for many years. All millers withdrew prices several weeks ago, as reported at the time, and reopened again about September 15th with a price of $6.85 per barrel. This price held only for a day or two, and then an advance was made to $7.10, which is the highest price in many years. The oat crop bids fair to be exceedingly short, promising but slightly over half a crop. If this is the case the market will in all probability go higher.

The advertised brands have not yet advanced, and are decidedly below the bulk basis. The brands referred to as "advertised brands" stand in a class by themselves, in that they are not affected by advances or declines, being priced at a figure calculated to allow for both. The advance in bulk oats, however, has this time been so exceedingly great that the advertised brands, such as "Quaker" and "Mother's" oats, will have to be advanced also, and an advance is expected at any time.

Although rolled oats, as stated, are at present exceedingly high, it is contended by the millers that they are still the cheapest food available.

Arguing for the Using Up of Old Labels

In the Original Federal Food Law Regulations Trade Were Permitted to Use Old Labels Until October 1st, If Made Legal by Sticker. Many Old Labels Still on Hand and National Wholesale Grocers' Association Asks Permission to Use Them After October 1st.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Sept. 20, 1907.

Representatives of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association were in this city on Wednesday last and had a conference with Dr. Wiley and the other members of the Federal Food Board over the question of permitting the use after October 1st, the date limit set by the Department, of old labels which the holders will not be able to use by that time.

The regulation which it was desired to extend is Regulation 17 of the original circular of rules, which reads as follows:—

(1) The regulation regarding the principal label will not be enforced until October 1, 1907, in the case of labels printed and now on hand whenever any statement therein contained which is contrary to the Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, as to character of contents shall be corrected by a supplemental label stamp or paster. All other labels now printed and on hand may be used without change until October 1, 1907.

The representatives of the Wholesalers' Association argued that many manufacturers and jobbers still had on hand large quantities of expensive labels, which were only technically wrong, and which, if they must now be destroyed, would involve losses of thousands of dollars.

There was considerable argument between the members of the Board and the jobbers, but no decision was rendered. The Board will decide the question, however, within a few days. It is considered likely that in the case of labels only technically wrong, their continued use until exhausted, or until the first of the year, will be permitted provided the misrepresentation, whatever it may be, is corrected by a sticker.

How Manufacturers Can Best Induce Grocers to Push Their Goods

Instead of Spending and Wasting Money Compelling Dealers to Handle Their Products, They Should Pursue the Line of Least Resistance and Make the Grocer Want to Handle Them. Suggestion How This Can Be Done.

It has been the consensus of opinion among food manufacturers for many years that the only way to successfully market their products was by creating a demand for them through advertising to consumers

Although their products reach the consumer through the grocer, few manufacturers have ever attempted to create a demand for them by getting the grocer's help.

The writer has discussed this question with many manufacturers and they were a unit in their opinion that it was impossible to interest grocers in any product to an extent that would cause them to really push it; that the only course open to them was to force the grocer to hand out their goods by inducing his customers to ask for them.

The writer has been a grocer, spent most of his life working with grocers, gets his livelihood through grocers, and in consequence grocer's interests are his interests. He believes in marketing food products the grocer is king, that in most instances he can sell what he wants to sell; that in seven cases out of ten his customers will take that particular brand of any certain product which he wishes them to take. If this is admitted there is no question about the grocer being the manufacturer's most important advertising medium—the first one to consider if he wants his goods to sell. If manufacturers, by advertising to consumers, only interest three out of ten to take their goods, regardless of the grocer's recommendation, and the grocer influences the other seven, the grocer's influence is more than twice as valuable to the manufacturer as his advertising to consumers.

The manufacturer to succeed should make the grocer want to sell his goods. How can this be accomplished? Grocers are in business for only one purpose—to make money. No class of merchants works as hard as grocers. No class of merchants works on as small a percentage of profit; none has as much to contend with to earn this profit, so the way to make a grocer want to sell a manufacturer's goods is to make his profits larger without making his work harder.

Everything being equal between the products of two manufacturers the one which comes the nearest to doing this is the one the grocer will not only want to sell, but the one he will sell.

Many millions of dollars are spent every year by manufacturers to interest the consumer, so the grocer will be forced to stock their goods to supply the demand thus created. This money is spent in newspaper, magazine, street car, billboard and other forms of advertising. The grocer derives some benefit from the expenditure of these vast sums, but the benefit is often swallowed up in the nuisance it creates. It doesn't appreciably increase his sales, for the consumer must have food, soaps, etc., and would get them even though none were advertised. The only effect it has is to induce the consumer to buy more of one manufacturer's products and less of another's; to try new things at the expense of old ones.

Consumers get little direct benefit from the millions of dollars spent in general advertising by manufacturers of food products; on the contrary, they are often induced to "give up the old friends for the new," when it would have been better for them had they stuck to the "old."

The writer is convinced that at least part of the money spent in exploiting food products and creating a demand for them should go into the grocer's pocket, and he believes it would be put there by many manufacturers if they were sure the sales of their products could be increased in this way.

The larger retailers and the chain stores sell many products under their own labels; they sell these goods in spite of the fact that there are many others of a similar character much more widely advertised to the consumer. This proves that the grocer can sell what he wants to sell.

Suppose the Baking Powder Trust, for example, were to follow this plan. Their product costs them about 18 cents per pound to manufacture. It is sold to the retailer for 42 to 43 cents per pound, who in turn sells it to the consumer for from 50 to 60 cents per pound. Allowing 5 cents per pound for the manufacturer's expenses and profits, this leaves 20 cents per pound to pay for advertising and the other methods used to induce consumers to ask grocers for their product. If the Baking Powder Trust were to sell their product to the grocer at the same price as now, and instead of spending this 20 cents per pound to force him to hand it out when the consumer asked for it gave the amount to the grocer (showing him a profit of about 55 per cent.), isn't it a certainty that the grocer would sell other brands of baking powder only when he was compelled to, especially if the manufacturers of the other brands continued to spend their surplus in the old way?

Manufacturers to whom the writer has proposed this plan, even though convinced that it would increase the sale of their goods, have hesitated to adopt it because they felt certain the grocer would cut off most of this big profit to take trade from his competitors. Now, suppose to avoid this contingency the manufacturer were to take this surplus money to a manufacturer of computing, counter or standard scales, show counters, bins, refrigerators or any of the store or household furnishings which the grocer must have and must draw on his bank account for and should contract for a large quantity of these goods and presented them to the grocer so he wouldn't have to buy them. The grocer would get instead of 20 cents per pound additional profit, using baking powder as an illustration, double that value in merchandise he had to have and would have to pay the long price for, because buying in large quantities the manufacturers could get nearly a dollar in retail value for every 50 cents he spent. This would almost double the grocer's profit on baking powder, and the incentive to cut his price, and at the same time his profit, would be eliminated.

While the cost of manufacture and the selling price of this baking powder shows a much greater difference than many other goods, there isn't a grocer whose shelve doesn't contain the products of a least twenty-five to fifty manufacturers who are spending hundreds thousands of dollars a year each t force them to hand out their goo by giving it to the newspaper magazines, street cars, billboard etc. Part of this money should g to the grocer, and when the manufacturer is convinced that the grocer can create a bigger demand f his goods than advertising to t consumer does, it will go to him.

Here is a perfectly feasible plan Suppose twenty-five of the bigge of these manufacturers were t form an association for the purpo of co-operatively testing the effec iveness of this method of marketin goods, and each issued to the gr cer with each case of his goods h bought a discount voucher, or any thing you care to call it, and a these vouchers, being issued by thi association, were redeemed by i This means instead of waiting si months to get enough rebate vouch ers with baking powder to entitl him to a computing scale that b pooling the vouchers from th twenty-five manufacturers the gr cer would have enough of them i one-twenty-fifth of that time, or week, to bring him his scale, an if he didn't happen to want a scal anything of equal value which h did want.

It is up to the grocer to get thi money and he can get it if he wil show the manufacturer this power Show the manufacturer that it wil cost him less to buy this power o the grocer's than it will to fight i through the consumer and he wil buy it, because, like the grocer, h is in business to make money.

All Staple Food Crops Below Normal.

Wheat, Corn and Oats Show Up Badly as Compared With Normal. Apples and Beans Also Below Par.

The Crop Reporting Board of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture finds, from the reports of the correspondents and agents of the bureau, as follows

The condition of corn on September 1st was 80.2, as compared with 82.8 last month, 90.2 on September 1, 1906, 89.5 on September 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 81.0.

The average condition of spring wheat when harvested was 77.1, as compared with 79.4 on August 1, 1907, 83.4 at time of harvest in 1906, 87.3 in 1905, and 66.2 in 1904.

The average condition of the oat crop when harvested was 65.5, against 75.6 last month, 81.9 reported September 1, 1906, 90.3 at the corresponding date in 1905, and a ten-year average of 82.6.

The average condition of barley when harvested was 78.5, against 84.5 on August 1, 1907, 89.4 reported September 1, 1906, 87.8 at the corresponding date in 1905, and a ten-year average of 84.3.

The average condition of buckwheat on September 1st was 77.4, against 91.9 one month ago, 91.2 on September 1, 1906, 91.8 on September 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 88.2.

The average condition of potatoes on September 1st was 80.2, against 88.5 one month ago, 85.3 on September 1, 1906, 80.9 on September 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 79.4

During August the condition of apples declined materially in New York, Pennsylvania and the New England States, reports received whence the past month being lower than at the same time last year. Reports indicate a prospective yield of not far from half of last year's crop.

Beans declined during August materially in both New York and Michigan, the principal producing States.

As to cranberries, reports from Massachusetts were about the same as a year ago, and from Wisconsin slightly worse.

Double Last Year's Valencia Raisin Supply.

If Good Weather Lasts There Will Be Very Heavy Crop of Spanish Valencia. Large Imports to this Country.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Sept. 20, 1907.

Consul C. S. Winans, of Valencia, reports that the prospect for the present raisin crop of that part of Spain is very much better than that of 1905 or 1906.

Should the weather continue seasonable until October there will be approximately 30,000 tons of raisins produced for export, about twice the amount produced last year. The fruit will be somewhat smaller in size than those of other years owing to the lack of rains during the growing season. During the last two years the drying season was very unfavorable, with the result that the raisins for both years were very badly cured, causing a good deal of dissatisfaction both to buyers and sellers.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XI.—Make Allowances for Your Salesmen.

Circumstances alter salesmanship.

The manager of a business who has himself been through the mill as a salesman and still retains a memory of times gone by is the easiest manager to work under, and there is a very good reason.

He is not expecting impossible things. He knows that conditions are different as soon as you are out of the house, and sales are a good deal harder to make. He knows that when a customer comes to the house he has already decided to buy, and the salesman only has to assist in the selection and suggest other things as he goes along to build up the order, but once outside the house with an order book or a line of samples the shoe is placed on the other foot. It is the salesman who is then looking for business, and not the customer looking for goods. The customer then declares he is full up on everything, and it is up to the salesman to pry loose an order for a small bunch of odds and ends if he cannot get nothing better.

The manager who meets a customer in the house and books a big order sometimes feels like a salesman should do equally well when out looking for orders. He fails to realize that his man came to him especially to buy, and that when the salesman found the same man he found him engaged in selling goods and his mind was not already made up to buy, in fact it was on other subjects entirely.

The manager who inherits his job, and does not grow into it, sometimes fails to grasp these little points of difference. F. A. P.

There are signs of revolt by the wholesale grocery trade against the arbitrary rulings of the Board in charge of the Federal food law. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association and the manufacturing and jobbing trade in general have been most punctilious in their efforts to obey the law. In order to go along peaceably they have even conformed scrupulously with regulations which counsel positively advised them were wholly unsupported by legal authority.

"Rules and Regulations."

Now, however, under decision after decision by the department, involving change after change in the label, there are signs of restiveness. One large Eastern jobber who has already been complied by the department's rulings to make two changes to certain labels which he uses, and who now finds himself confronted, under the recent sulphur ruling, with the necessity of making a third, has served a flat refusal to do so upon the department. His intention is to bait the Federal Board into doing something more than making rules, and he will have the sympathy of every member of his rule-ridden trade.

Let us have done with rule-making! What the Board ought to do is to bring a series of amicable test cases covering the mooted questions of the act. The department contends that sulphur in food is illegal and is only temporarily tolerated to give the trade latitude to become accustomed to the change. Very well, let us see if it is, in the only way that will tell us. The machinery of the law is complete. Let somebody submit to technical arrest on the charge of selling sulphured fruits. Put it up to the court, from which alone can come anything worth the paper it is written on. Do this and we will get somewhere. At present we are all inextricably entangled in a maze of rules and regulations, many of which find not the slightest support in the law.

All Lies.

At the recent annual convention of the National Confectioners' Association in Chicago, the Executive Committee made a report which shows, rather exasperatingly, to those in the trade, to what extent daily newspapers exaggerate when they come to talk about alleged food poisoning cases. Here is a summarized extract from the committee's report:—

Article in New York "World," July 2, 1906, headed: "Five Children Ill from Eating Poisoned Candy." Upon investigation the sickness was found to be due to milk drunk by the children taken ill.

Article in New York "Evening Journal," July 11, 1906, headed: "Poison in a Stick of Red Candy Kills Boy." Upon investigation we found the death of the child to have been caused from eating pickles. This same report appeared in the "Daily Standard Union," Brooklyn, N. Y., July 11, 1906, in an article headed: "Ate Cheap Candy; Dies in a Few Hours."

Article in "Spokesman's Review, Spokane, Wash., March 4, 1906, headed: "Poison in Cheap Candy." Result of investigation showed sickness to have been caused from eating too many pickles.

Article in Grand Rapids (Mich.) "News," September 12, 1906, headed: "Poisoned by Colored Candy." Result of investigation proved that there were no grounds for the report.

Article in Philadelphia "Press," Philadelphia, Pa., October 8, 1906, headed: "This Boy Killed by Colored Candy." Upon investigation the death of the boy was found to have been caused by congestion of the brain.

Article in New York "World," October 25, 1906, headed: "Candy Kills Girl, Makes Others Ill.' Investigation showed that candy had nothing to do with the death of the girl.

Article in "Public Ledger," Philadelphia, Pa., November 22, 1906, headed: "Two Children Dead After Eating Candy." Investigation showed mother of children to have been indicted for administering poison to them through the medium of candy, which was evidently selected by her because so much had been printed in the papers about poisoned candy, and thus feeling by its use suspicion would not be aroused, which almost happened to be the case.

Article in the "Post," Pittsburg, Pa., November 8, 1906, headed: "Eats Candy and Dies." Investigation showed no grounds whatsoever for this statement.

Article in Chicago "Examiner," December 4, 1906, headed: "Colored Pop Corn Kills Boy." Investigation showed death not to be due to reported cause. Physician in charge, when replying, wrote: "The story was the result of the vivid imagination of a newspaper reporter."

Article in Chicago "Examiner," December 4, 1906, headed: "Poison is Sold as Candy in Schools." Investigation proved this statement to have been entirely unfounded, and a newspaper lie.

Article in a paper published in Scranton, Pa., January 3, 1907, headed: "Ptomaine Poisoning Caused Death of Dorothy Ware." Physician in attendance replied: "The article is incorrect," which proves another case of reporter's imaginary fever.

Article in "Whig," Quiney, Ill., December 25, 1906, headed: "Tragic Xmas in Hancock County Home," and further reporting death from eating candy. Our investigation showed death to have been due to eating medical tablets by mistake.

Article in Washington (Pa.) paper headed: "Candy Caused Boy's Death." Death, upon investigation, was found to be due to blow on the head.

Article in the Philadelphia "Telegraph," November 30, 1906, headed: "Dies of Candy Poisoning." Report showed death to have been due to acute indigestion from overeating.

The results of these investigations are no different than have been determined from similar investigations by our association during the past twenty-three years.

The extent to which the food trade has suffered from mendacity of this character cannot be calculated. And in every case it would appear to be the result either of pure carelessness or of a reckless desire to print a sensation. For every one of the cases reported above would have revealed its real character to any newspaper who made a half decent effort to learn it.

As to "Standard" Tomatoes.

One of the sorest needs of the grocery trade is the adoption of some fixed definition of a "standard" tomato. No word in the English language means more things than the word "standard" as applied to canned tomatoes. The trade application of the word contradicts its real meaning in the most ridiculous way; for "standard" means criterion—a rule; while nothing is less of a criterion or less of a rule than the expression "standard" when applied to tomatoes.

From the current trade letter of Messrs. Strasbaugh, Silver & Co., canned goods brokers of Aberdeen, Md., a single pregnant sentence is reproduced: "We have cut samples this week of lots of so-called standards varying in our opinion at least 5 to 10 cents per dozen."

Under the present system take twelve brokers with different brands of tomatoes to sell, and the word "standard" will have a different meaning for every man, naturally a meaning that fits his particular brand. The condition points for relief to two alternatives: If it is possible to get a criterion of tomato quality that can be made reasonably fixed and unvariable, let us get it. If it is not possible, and there are many who contend that it is not, then let us abandon a standard which is not a standard, and force every can offered to stand squarely on its own feet.

Scarce Apples Will Make High-Priced Cider.

New Prices Very Late in Opening. Expected in October and Will Probably Be Very High. Cider Vinegar Also Advances.

The pronounced scarcity of apples in New York State, which is the leading cider-making district of the United States, is sure to radically affect the cider market for the coming season. It is now considerably after the time when the new future price on cider is usually named, and orders should now be in process of taking. As yet, however, prices have not even been named, and will probably not be forthcoming until some time in October. The new price is expected to be nearly if not quite as in the very short season of 1890, when the market reached 18 cents per gallon. The opening price last year was 10 cents, but this was because of a plentiful supply of apples and sharp competition between manufacturers.

Cider vinegar will also be affected, from the same causes. Already the price has advanced 4 cents per gallon above the contract price made last October, which is still in force as to contract vinegar.

It is practically certain that all the large manufacturers of cider will this year preserve their goods with benzoate of soda. Some of them made heavy losses last year through trying to do without it.

Fully equipped, up-to-date facilities for planting, cultivating and gathering the finest tomatoes and blending them with the purest spices and ingredients is what enables us to give you absolute perfection in Snider's Catsup.

Blind Match Jobber Shelly Goes for Trust Again

Trenton, N. J., Dealer Makes Further Charges That Diamond Match Is Meanly Trying to Destroy Him. Giving Ammunition to Other Jobbers to Use Against Blind Man.

Samuel Shelly, the plucky blind match jobber of Trenton, N. J., is still battering away at the Diamond Match Co. Several months ago the "Grocery World" published the details of the Diamond Co's attack upon this poor blind man, as the result of which he was practically forced out of the match business. Since that time Mr. Shelly has let no opportunity slip to expose the Trust's apparent meannesses toward him, and has fairly put the gigantic match concern in the position of cold-bloodedly seeking to destroy a poor little blind man whose only fault was his refusal to sink his independence.

Mr. Shelly has issued another letter to the Trust, a copy of which is as follows:—

145 Bayard St., Trenton, N. J.
September 7, 1907.

Diamond Match Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen: — The writer begs leave to ask whether the "Contract" with your customers or "agents," excluding them from the right to handle any matches except those you manufacture or control is still in effect? My reason for asking this question is that not a great while ago I was informed by a person well versed in match details, that you had given special permission to a particular wholesale grocery house of this city to handle certain "Non-Trust Matches" for the sole purpose of "knocking" me. It is, of course, hard to credit such an absurd statement, for if true, it plainly shows injustice to the rest of your customers, as well as to dealers who are independent in their tendencies, a prerogative which, in my opinion, every American citizen is free to exercise. Ridiculous as this rumor certainly is, it will be found on looking into the matter, that this particular wholesale grocery house (Muschert, Reeves & Co.), are handling these certain "Non-Trust Matches," and openly selling them in competition with your goods. Now this is radically wrong, since you will doubtless recollect that it was simply for committing this "grave crime" that I was turned down and cut off your jobbing list, without being given a chance to explain or defend my position, a privilege universally accorded to any one who is accused of the most trifling offence, wherever intelligence, honor, justice and civilization exist.

We are also confronted with another very peculiar problem, viz.: Why is it that at a time when almost everything in the shape of merchandise is being advanced in price, there should be a drop of about fifteen per cent. on a certain product of the Diamond Match Company? Gentlemen, you know that during the nine years in which I served you almost as faithfully as it was possible for a slave to do, that I had quite a large trade on small matches used by tobacco dealers for advertising purposes. You know that during the whole of this period the cheapest of your brands could not be sold legitimately for less than 35c. You know that for seven out of these nine years you compelled me to pay freight charges on your goods (while at the same time you were allowing them to others), and thereby unjustly increasing your profits at my expense. You also know that last fall a new match was brought out bearing the name "Peerless," and which the trade in some sections, at least, are now asked to buy for 30c. a gross. You perhaps know that one of your Trenton jobbers (David Michaelson) is now regularly calling on the handful of people who were accustomed to get their supplies from me in small lots week after week, and that he is urging them to give him their trade on the grounds that he is now able to sell them matches cheaper than I can.

It may be that Mr. Michaelson is doing this at your bidding, and that you are entirely responsible for this tricky and cowardly advantage.

Now, gentlemen, if the affairs of your institution are conducted on strictly sound and honest business principles, if you follow a policy thoroughly clean and that cannot be phased by public inspection and criticism, then surely I am entitled to an explanation of the grievances to which I have called your attention Surely you should be willing to tell me why you have done everything in your power, so far as matches are concerned, to try and stop me from making a living, which, I trust, may be forthcoming without any unnecessary waste of time.

Very truly yours,
SAMUEL SHELLY.

Judge a Grocery Store by Its Butter

Ever think that people are more apt to judge a grocery store by its butter than by anything else? Possibly that's because badness in butter shows more quickly than badness in most other things. Whatever the reason, the shrewd grocer is just a little more careful to see that his butter is all right —and always all right —than he is about other things.

If he will adopt

Gurnse Butter

as his leader, he can relax his vigilance.

Gurnse Butter is doubly inspected and isn't sent out unless it is perfect—perfect in taste, smell, body, color and everything else—that's why it's always uniform.

Gurnse Butter is the finest creamery butter produced. It is all right and always all right.

Uncertainty Over Label Pilgrimage. Extract Manufacturers Worried Over High Raw Materials. Status of a Citron Substitute. Still Discussing Water in Butter. Status of Use of Sulphur in Nuts. Old Coffee and Spice Jobbers Assign.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 20, 1907.

Reports received here from Washington indicate that the representatives of the wholesale grocery interests who went from here and from other cities to ask for a postponement of the day on which the label regulations will all become effective had quite a task. A hearing was given by the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, at which Wm. C. Breed, the counsel for the Wholesale Grocers' Association, spoke at length. Representatives of Austin, Nichols & Co. and of other firms were also heard and they were asked many questions by the redoubtable Dr. Wiley.

Assurances were given that if the year's postponement were granted the association would not ask for any further delay. When the New York men came back they were still in doubt as to what will be the action of the Board at Washington.

Manufacturers of flavoring extracts and jobbers in this city say that the advance in the cost of manufacture, as a result of the new food law, already noted in the "Grocery World," is still causing anxiety in the trade. "Not only are we now obliged to pay remarkably high prices for our oils and beans, but we are also obliged to use much greater quantities of such materials than we ever did before." So said a manufacturer who speaks of the "new form" as the way in which extracts are now made, while the old form was the way when substitutes were common. In the case of vanilla extract, he said, that since the law went into force some manufacturers have made their first purchases of vanilla beans, having formerly made their extracts without the use of a single bean. It is certainly, he said, the increased consumption of the beans, in the cheap and middle grades, that has sent up the price, and this is also true in the case of oils of lemon and oranges.

The "new form" vanilla extract, was quoted by this manufacturer at $12 a gallon for a fair grade, and he said that by dilution the price may be brought down to $6 a gallon, while there are other variations corresponding to the grade of beans that is used.

It is claimed in some quarters that the sale of green spad, in the candied form, under the name of citroen, constitutes a violation of the new food law. The spad, also known as spadaforessi, and commonly called in the trade a bastard spad, has been sold for years as a cheaper form of citroen. Now it is claimed that this spad is only a freak form of a lemon.

In England it is claimed the cheaper spad is sold only as a substitute for citroen. It has been selling here at 13½ to 16 cents a pound, while true citroen gets 18 to 19½ cents. The critics say that the substitute is not worth any more than lemon peel, which sells at 9½ to 10½ cents, and would not bring the price now paid of it were properly designated.

It is charged that some importers have been getting a low rate of duty on the spad by classifying it with lemon peel on importation and that they afterward sell it for citroen.

Several jobbers and retail grocers who have been long in the business said that they have always looked upon this spad as a true citroen, although of an inferior kind, and they did not believe that any change should be made that would prevent it from being sold as citroen.

Moisture in butter is again the subject of discussion in the New York Mercantile Exchange and a committee was appointed Wednesday to attend a hearing to be given to-day by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington. Representatives of the butter commission merchants in Chicago and other cities will also be present. It is explained that the commission merchants desire a ruling that will place upon the manufacturers the responsibility when the moisture is excessive. The Federal officials have been quite energetic of late, it seems, in prosecuting merchants who ship butter containing too much moisture, and the merchants think it is time for the manufacturers to assume the responsibility for what is done in the creameries.

Another class of merchants who are worried are the members of the Dried Fruit Association, who held a special meeting Tuesday to consider the use of sulphur in curing walnuts and almonds. The association is to get an opinion, it is expected, from Dr. Wiley as to whether or not nuts, so cured, may be sold.

Detectives are looking for a band of thieves who by adding postscripts to orders for groceries asking for change for $5 or $10 to be sent with delivery boy have cheated a number of grocers on the Upper West Side. It is said that more than thirty grocers have complained to the police.

G. J. Sender, a grocer at 180 Columbus avenue, reported last Saturday to the police that he had been cheated by the scheme. An order was sent for goods amounting to 90 cents. At the bottom was the postscript asking that change for $5 be sent with the goods. The address given was an apartment house.

The delivery boy placed the groceries on the dumb waiter of the house and sent it to the upper floor. He waited, but got no answer. Then he pulled the dumb waiter down again. The groceries as well as the $4.10 had disappeared. An investigation revealed the fact that the flat to which the groceries were sent was unoccupied and no one of the name, as given, was known in the neighborhood. People in an adjoining flat saw three young men hurry from the unoccupied apartment.

In other instances the swindlers pursued similar tactics.

W. H. Montanye & Co., Inc., wholesale dealers in coffee, spices and grocers' specialties, at No. 68 Barclay street, one of the oldest concerns in this line, made an assignment Tuesday to Chas. H. Meyer. The attorney for the assignee said that the assignment was due to "dry rot." The assignment was made by advice of some of the largest creditors and the corporation's affairs will be placed entirely in the hands of the creditors for settlement. The attorneys said tha they could give no definite figure at present, but thought the liabilitie would not exceed $50,000. Th business has been established 6 years and has, it is said, some valu able trade-marks.

FRED A. MCGILL.

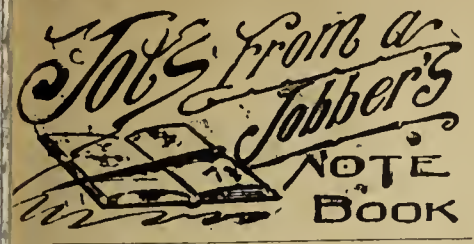
Manufacturers who have adopted premium schemes to create a demand for their products, have always given the premiums to consumers. Where manufacturers have offered an incentive to grocers to push their goods, the incentive has always been small. It had to be small, because no individual manufacturer could afford to give a grocer from his individual profits anything more important than a silk hat, an umbrella, et But when twenty or more prominent manufacturers, whose products are sold by grocers everywhere, set aside a part of their advertising appropriations to put into a fund to buy something substantial for the merchant, that something represents an article of sufficient value to make it worth the grocer's while to take a real interest in pushing the goods of the manufacturers who take this means of showing their appreciation of the grocer's services. That the importance of this matter may be plain to you, figure out the following: The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., New York, gives you a quantity of Universal coupons with their Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better goods ever came into this market. Add these coupons to the ones you get with the products of the following firms and you will find you can save enough coupons in three months to entitle you to a first-class set of harness, a platform scale or a roll-top desk. In six months you can save enough to get a good runabout, in a year a good piano:

The American Premium Co., Philadelphia; Wrigley Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia; Franklin Baker Co., Philadelphia; the Porcela Co., Philadelphia; McCanna & Fraser Co., Philadelphia; John Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Weber & Loesch, Philadelphia; Wm. Dreydoppel's Sons, Philadelphia; J. W. Beardsley's Sons, New York; Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City; Sea Foam Baking Powder Co., New York; Flodon Manufacturing Co., Boston, Mass.; Potter & Wrightington, Boston, Mass.

Within a month a number of other big local houses will join this enterprise. Don't you think this matter is important enough for you to push the goods of these firms? Don't you think the manufacturers who have been been first to recognize the grocer's right of consideration should have the grocer's hearty co-operation?

Nothing holds in check the "mean" customer as well as Forbes Indexed Coupon Books. You always know where "he is at."



Scarcely any factor of the grocery business shows a wider difference of opinion than the prospects from the current tomato pack. Some authorities declare that the weather of the past several days has been perfect for tomatoes, that the canneries were working night and day, and that the pack was sure to be very heavy and prices lower. Others agree that the pack may be large, but contend that prices will get no lower, as nothing less than 85 cents per dozen will pay the packer. Still others scout the possibility of any lower prices, but put it on another ground—labor conditions at the canneries. One veteran broker with whom I talked on the subject during the week said that if the packers could get enough hands to run two shifts a day while the tomato supply was at its height, then the pack might be heavy. He contended, however, that the necessary labor was hard to get, particularly competent labor. This he thought was partly because of its transient nature. This broker cited the case of one of his principals—a large Southern packer—who recently told him that of all the foreign help he had been able to get hold of, only one man was capable of nailing a box in proper style. The balance were roustabouts—waifs—who could do the most ordinary work, but nothing better.

Touching the canned salmon situation, it occurs to me that there is a great field lying unexplored to the salmon packers, and it is in fostering the use of canned salmon by the hotels. Naturally the chance doesn't mean as much this year as usual, as the supply of salmon is barely enough to go round the grocery trade, but in years of heavy pack, like some that we have had, particularly of red Alaska, it occurs to me that it ought to be profitable for some one to start a campaign to get the hotels to put salmon on their bills of fare. I have eaten at a good many hotel tables in my time, but never once do I remember seeing cold canned salmon on the menu. Just why I have never inquired; it can hardly be the price, as salmon is nowhere near as expensive as chicken, or even tongue or cold boiled ham, all of which are on the bill of every hotel that amounts to anything. The restaurants consume a very large quantity of salmon, particularly the popular-priced ones. I can name one or two restaurants in Philadelpha who will each day buy a solid can of red Alaska salmon at a time for use in sandwiches. They all buy red Alaska, as the other grades are too high.

The prune market is ruling at the highest price reached in years—a basis of 5¼ cents per pound—but the fact is attracting comparatively little attention, since everything is on an equally high basis. And to any one who believes that the high price of prunes will curtail consumption, a good answer is that even at the advance prunes are the cheapest staple dried fruit now on the market. Apples are quoted at 11 cents per pound for future delivery, peaches are even higher than that and apricots prohibitively high to the average consumer. So that any one who wants to use dried fruit at all will still naturally turn to prunes as the lowest priced.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking f the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Departmen and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tri several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribe probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of w dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing windo displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily ne or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully a perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangeme should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black i (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows a fair demand at steady and unchanged prices. There has been no development of any character during the week, but there seems some reason to expect an advance in the price of low-grade black teas within the next few weeks. Green teas already have advanced.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffees has ruled weak during the past week. The outlook for the market seems very dark, from the syndicate's standpoint, owing to the enormous supply. The receipts are increasing all the time, and the speculative public will not be cajoled into the market. This makes a very narrow basis for speculation to work on, and for that reason makes it increasingly difficult to hold the market up without daily bull news from the growing districts. It is hard to see, however, how even that artificial stimulus can avail long. The frost period is over, and crop scares can no longer be built upon it. The next event will be possible drought and this will probably be worked by the syndicate in a desperate effort to bolster up the market. Meanwhile people who use coffee are buying for their needs, and the increased needs of the cool season are making the demand somewhat larger than it has been. An article in another column makes clear the tremendous burden the syndicate has been laboring under in order to defeat the natural result of the terrific over-supply. Mild coffees are steady and in fair demand and Java and Mocha likewise.

Sugar.

The sugar market is unsettle Raws have shown some dispositi to harden during the week, and this writing are somewhat firm On this side the situation is abo unchanged. Refined is unchange steady and in fair demand.

Syrup and Molasses.

On account of a decline in freig rates, glucose has declined 3 poi during the past week. No chan has occurred in compound syru which is in fair demand for the se son. Sugar syrup is active, large for speculation, and prices show a advance of several cents a gallo Molasses is unchanged, steady a in light demand.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is firi Irish mackerel are very scarce a show another advance for the we of $1 per barrel. Shore macker are firm also, though this season catch was 29,000 barrels, as again 8,000 barrels last year. Prices c new fat Norway mackerel are e pected any day. As all condition are favorable, they are expected be fairly high. The demand f mackerel is excellent. Cod, hal and haddock are still maintained c the high basis, but the demand ha not yet begun. Salmon is firm a unchanged. Packers are com pletely sold up on all grades. Sa dines, both foreign and domesti are steady and unchanged; dema moderate.

Canned Goods.

Much uncertainty surrounds th prospects of the tomato pack. the weather holds the pack wi vary, according to various opinion from fair to very heavy. From th primary districts come reports glutted fruit and packers workin night and day. It must be borne in mind, however, that the season opened very late and the glut would have to be continued for some time in order to permit the packers to catch up. The average price for 3-pound goods, either new or old, is 85 cents f. o. b. in a large way. The demand is good. Corn is unchanged, showing no change in situation and no particular demand. Peas are unchanged, being still stiff and scarce, particularly the lower grades. Offerings are few and anything good is snapped up. Peaches show a disposition to advance still further, meaning particularly low grades of Western brands, some of which (Ohio) have advanced 15 cents during the week. New York gallons on spot are still $3.75, with no future offerings to speak of as yet. The tone of small Baltimore canned goods is unchanged and in light demand. Most lines are firm through scarcity or sympathy and string beans are scarcer than they have ever been before at this season. It looks like a bare first hands market on them within a short time. California canned goods are firm and unchanged, lines being badly broken.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes are selling well at about unchanged prices, large sizes commanding a premium. Futures show a disposition to advance, some holders quoting a 5¼-cent basis, though others will sell below that. The prune outlook is firm. Peaches show nothing new and no special demand. Raisins are unchanged and in fair demand. Spot stock is scarce, but the first new fruit is on the way. Currants are unchanged. The spot demand is light, as the trade are waiting for new fruit, which is en route. It looks like a steady and unchanged market in currants for some time. Apricots are high, scarce and dull. Apples are firm and unchanged.

Butter.

The demand for all grades of butter is very good. There has been an advance of 1 cent per pound both on solids and prints during the week, due to the good demand and a slight falling off in production. The butter market is now ruling at 20 per cent. above a year ago. The outlook is for a firm market and unchanged prices during the coming week on all grades.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans now rule at about $2 per bushel. Spot stocks are small. New beans should be coming forward now, but bad weather in the shipping districts has interfered. Marrows have advanced to $2.35, and the demand is slow. California limas on spot rule on a 6-cent basis, but new will be ready to ship within a few days, and they can be bought on a 5½-cent basis. Split peas of all grades are steady to firm, unchanged and in good demand.

Eggs.

All grades of eggs have advanced 1 cent per dozen during the past week, owing to the continued good demand. The supply of eggs is about normal, and the quality is improving as the weather cools and the season advances. A firm market with probably unchanged prices is looked for for the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at the recent advance. Stocks of cheese are considerably short of a year ago, and prices are ruling about 10 per cent. above that time. The consumptive demand is still very good, and the next change in price will probably be a further advance of ½ cent per pound on all grades.

Provisions.

The market on all smoked meats is dull, at a decline throughout the line of ¼ cent from last week. The decline is seasonable and is due to the falling off in the consumptive demand accompanied by increased production. The demand is about normal for the season, and there will probably be a steady market at unchanged prices for the balance of the week. Pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged. If any change comes it may be a slight advance. Dried beef, canned meats and barrel pork are all firm and unchanged.

Warning Against Bleached Flour.

North Dakota Food Department Announces That It Will Exclude Artificially Whitened Flour from the State After October 1, 1907. Believes It to Be Harmful.

The Food Department of North Dakota, which is operated in connection with the Government Agricultural Experiment Station of that district, has sent all over the country a "bleached flour warning," which excludes from the State, after October 1st, flour artificially bleached by any chemical process or agent. The notice reads as follows:—

PURE LARD

Gives satisfaction to the consumer, and, therefore, reflects credit on the dealer selling it.

In order to give the very best satisfaction to all concerned it should not only be pure, but should contain all the original, natural oils.

Many brands are "pure," but do not contain these rich oils, as the manufacturer extracted them to increase his profits. This leaves but a residue, white, sweet, pure perhaps, or at least unadulterated, but correspondingly "poor," because it lacks richness.

Such lard can be purchased for less money than

but the consumer will require a larger quantity to do the same amount of work, consequently it costs more in the end and fails to give the necessary satisfaction.

Sell your customers Burk's Lard, which is Guaranteed by $1000 Bond

to be strictly pure, to contain nothing but what results from the rendering of good, wholesome hog fat and to contain all its original properties, none of which have been extracted.

This bond is deposited with the Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia.

BLEACHED FLOUR WARNING.

Having investigated carefully the subject of flour bleaching as now generally practiced, and having become convinced that the said process of bleaching results in the production of a product prejudicial to the health and best interests of the consuming public, therefore:

On and after October 1, 1907, the sale of bleached flour containing any residue of Nitrogen Absorption, addition, or substitution products and intended for consumption within the State of North Dakota, is declared to be in violation of the Food Law of this State.

All other flour bleached by any chemical process or agent, and containing no added residual products, shall on and after the said date be labeled as "Bleached," and in type uniform in size with the name of the brand or producer of the flour.

All flours or other food products shall be truthfully labeled with regard to net weight, the true grade and the name of the real manufacturer or jobber.

Nothing in this order shall be construed as in any way prohibiting or restricting the use of bleaching agents in flour and milling products to be shipped out of the State.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Salt Lake, Utah.

The crusade now on in Salt Lake City to determine whether the Butchers' and Grocers' Association is a combine in restraint of trade is being watched with deep interest.

Investigations made by Salt Lakers are said to have disclosed the fact that local consumers are discriminated against. For instance, it has been discovered that tomatoes canned at Woods Cross near Salt Lake are sold in Denver at a figure that made it profitable for Salt Lake grocers to buy those tomatoes in Denver and ship them back to Salt Lake, the difference, after adding freight, amounting to 7 cents a case.

Utah butter, sold at wholesale in Salt Lake at 30 cents a pound, is delivered in Los Angeles at 26 cents f. o. b.

Many items of this kind are to be presented to the State Attorney-General as evidence of an unlawful combination, in the hope that such action will be taken as will relieve the people from what are looked upon as exorbitant prices for the necessaries of life.

Minneapolis, Minn.

The Retail Credit Association of Minneapolis and the Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Association have perfected arrangements whereby they will exchange all their credit information. This means that at least 60,000 additional names will be added to the already large list of the grocers' association and before January 1, 1908, they will be in possession of at least 100,000 names, all live.

The Retail Credit Association of Minneapolis is composed of twenty-two of the largest downtown retail mercantile establishments in Minneapolis.

My horse during the night while in his stall injured himself, causing a large swelling both in and outside of hock. There was no lameness, and the swelling entirely disappeared in a week by applying your remedy." Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1907.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I enclose you some of our sample cards. One side changed weekly. The other as a filler, instead of reading "To the Lady of the House," and changed probably every six weeks. This to reduce the expense. The results are very satisfactory, in a sense; but we feel there is a class of customers whom we do not reach. Will you kindly give some ideas that would enable the single store grocer to advertise in a way that could reach this class, in a way that he would feel his ads would be read without his considering the item of expense too heavy. Taking it for granted the average city grocer is so located that newspaper ads are out of the question.

Yours very truly,
H. L. Loop.

Mr. Loop incloses several green cards about 5 x 10 inches printed the narrow way on both sides. I reproduce one of them in reduced size. On the side which is changed every six weeks appears an advertisement of bread and coffee; the other side, as Mr. Loop says, is devoted to a greater variety and is changed every week:—

Mr. Loop says his advertising pays him satisfactorily, but that it fails to reach a certain class of trade. He asks me to help him reach that class, but doesn't say what class it is. Is it the better class or the poorer? I assume that it is the better class, because the sort of advertising he is doing is always calculated to appeal especially to the middle and lower classes. I don't mean by that that it is not dignified and respectable advertising, because it is both, but simply because these highly colored circulars and cards have apparently become a fixed means of advertising for current floating trade.

This is very fair advertising, prepared with care, apparently, but not very tastefully printed. An improvement could be made by using a little lighter type for the headings and the prices, and using light boldface for all prices instead of in some only. The main headings of these cards might be a little snappier.

"Do Quality" holds no particular invitation to become interested. The headlines of the cards not reproduced are "Rely on it," "In Hot Summer Days," and "Ah, There's the Rub." The last would have been rather a catchy heading for an advertisement of a laundry soap that required no rubbing, but as a heading for a meat advertisement it is not very bright. Spend some time on the headings. Make them look interesting. A little practice will enable you to do this very nicely. To show what a hypnotic influence an interesting looking headline has, as compared with the dull sort I have had two headlines set, one the kind I call "interesting looking," and the other one of Mr. Loop's heads. See if you can notice any difference:—

What Mrs. Jones Said

Rely on It

Now to come back to the question of reaching the class that this advertising doesn't reach now. I shall assume that Mr. Loop means the better class, and shall discuss the case from that standpoint. I think I can see why this kind of advertising doesn't appeal to the best people. There is a class of consumers who watch for these highly colored cards that are thrown around vestibules, and these are probably the sort that Mr. Loop is reaching. But the really best people don't trouble themselves with such things. As a matter of fact, these vestibule cards and circulars seldom or never ever get to the woman of the house at all, for they are swept out by the servant as fast as they appear. I should say that to reach people of this class a much more pretentious sort of advertising must be done, say in the form of a little folder, printed on white paper in a much nicer and neater way than this card. It ought to be sent by mail under a 2-cent stamp, addressed to the woman of the house personally. You can thus make certain that your advertisement will get into her hands, and it will then rest with you whether it will hold her after it gets her. Naturally this sort of advertising will cost you more than the green cards, but in my judgment nothing any poorer can be depended on to get in where you want it to.

Blowing Up Cold to Salesmen.

Ever sit by and notice how different the expression is on the average merchants's face when a man comes in to buy something than when one comes in who wants to sell something?

By George, sometimes you wouldn't think it was the same fellow.

I had occasion to go into a certain jobbing house for the first time the other day. I went in on business and had never met the people before.

One of the firm was just waiting on a customer. He was just about the most gracious fellow I'd seen for months. I mean the jobber. He chatted and chinned along with the customer, called him pet names, pushed the cigar box under his nose when he went out, shook hands and patted him on the back, and told him he was always glad to see him whether he bought anything or not.

Really, it warmed my heart to see him. Gad, that's a jolly good fellow and no mistake, I said to myself.

The customer went out, and the jobber settled down to his desk. In a minute a rice broker came in, hunting an order. It was one of the oldest brokers on the street, with an established trade—not a strange newcomer working to get in.

I don't exaggerate a little bit when I say that I didn't know for a minute whether the jobber hadn't changed places with a twin brother. He gave the best imitation of a clam I ever saw. The rice broker stood by his desk, waiting for attention. The jobber didn't look up for several minutes, and when he did he didn't say a word—just gave him the frozen stare and only that for a minute. The broker told his little story and started to open up some samples. The jobber went on with his writing, and when he had finished it got up and walked deliberately away, mumbling as he did so, "got too much ——— rice now."

The broker packed up his samples and went out.

I felt like saying to the jobber: "You fool! You outrageous ass! Don't you know that when you sell a retailer you've sold only one man, while if you get next a salesman and make a good buy you may get hold of something so good you can sell it to a hundred retailers?"

Of those two men, the retailer and the broker, I claim it would—or at least might have—paid the jobber better to throw his cigars to the broker.

(Did you hear that chorus of "amens" from the brokers?)

For if he had the right stuff to sell right, the retailer'll come to him without any handshakes or cigars.

And the broker or the salesman is the man to get next, to give him the right stuff to sell right.

I wonder how many of you fellows realize that it's a darned sight more important to buy right than it is to sell. Don't you know that a thing well bought is half sold? If you can get the goods to sell—good goods at the right price—you can sell 'em all right and don't you forget it.

Don't tell me that the salesman hasn't got anything to do with it and that he has to sell to everybody at the same price.

It's not true. Time and time again a salesman and broker can give a friend a good thing if he wants to. Mind you, I say a friend.

The man who blows up cold to any man who can help him to buy right is a plumb chump.

I know a merchandise broker who hasn't got a friend among the trade he sells. The trade don't like him, they even despise him and distrust him. Yet the fellow has worked himself up, does a big business and is worth money. Know why? Because he's as sharp as steel to get hold of goods to sell. He finds 'em somehow, often when other brokers can't, and time and time again he has stuff just a shade below the market. The trade buy his stuff not because they like him, because they don't; not because he's a salesman, because he ain't, but simply because it pays them to buy 'em.

Don't you see? His goods se themselves without any salesmar ship whatever because they wer bought right.

Think this broker ever has a col wave for the fellow with goods t sell? Not on your life! He work him and jollies him, pulls his leg i he can, and simply does everythin in the world to get next and sta next. He knows it pays him to d it. And he knows the buyer wi come without coaxing if he has th goods.

If I was in business for mysel and could afford it I'd give a dinne to the salesmen who called on m every month, at which real chan pagne would be served. I'd g next those fellows by every decen means I could. I'd pay more atten tion to 'em in one minute than would to my own customers in week.

Know why?

Because the customers woul come if they could do better wit me than with the other fellow.

And they could do better with m if my goods were bought bette than the other fellow's.

And the chance is they would b bought better than the other fel low's if I got as close to men wit goods to sell as I would expect to Freeze up to a salesman? Oh no, don't do it! Not to any sales man, no matter what he's selling Get his good feeling anyway—i may pay you big dividends.

THE STROLLER.

New Orleans to Have Chain Stores.

The chain-store plan of retail grocery stores will soon reach New Orleans, La., according to the published statements of Duke C. Bowers, a grocer of Memphis, who is now operating 25 stores on a cash basis in that city. Mr. Bowers proposes to introduce chain grocery stores to New Orleans.

Removal.

Owing to the increased demand for their salted specialties, "Oakdale Midgets, "Oakdale Twigs" and "Oakdale Pretzels," the Oakdale Baking Co., Tenth and Susquehanna avenue, this city, have been obliged to increase their oven capacity to keep pace with the demand. The offices, package department and salesroom have been removed to the second floor of their building, which allows them an additional working space of about 6,000 square feet. The new ovens will nearly double their output, and enable the company hereafter to fully supply the wants of the trade. Their trademarks, "Oakdale," "Midgets" and "Twigs" are registered in the U. S. Patent Office as their exclusive property when applied to their styles of salted products.

First Official Figures Showing Brazil's Tremendous Coffee Crop

Nearly Twenty and One-half Million Bags. Increase of 84 per Cent. Over Last Year. Even This Not the Best Brazil Can Do, as Some of Brazilian Coffee States Showed No Increase. Syndicate Has Already Spent $90,000,000 to Hold Up Market for Rio and Santos. Maintaining of Market Terrific Problem in Face of Overpowering Supply.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Sept. 20, 1907.

In a report from Rio de Janeiro Consul-General G. E. Anderson states that the final official figures for the coffee crop of Brazil for the year ending June 30th show that the total entries in all Brazil reached 20,409,180 bags, representing an increase over the previous year of 9,353,802 bags, or 84.6 per cent., and an amount over the average for the past four years of 8,948,797 bags and exceeding the previous banner crop of 1901-2 by 4,132,715 bags, or 25.4 per cent.

Of the crop there have been shipped to foreign ports a total of 17,702,329 bags, or 6,745,931 bags more than last year. Of the total shipments the United States took 6,520,323 bags, or 36.9 per cent. of the crop, as compared with 5,068,472 bags, or 46.2 per cent. of the crop last year, 6,329,760 bags, or 61.9 per cent. of the crop in 1904-5, 6,855,235 bags, or 45 per cent. of the crop in the former banner year of 1901-2.

The bulk of the increase in the great crop last year came in the State of Sao Paulo, where the bulk of the crop generally is produced All the States producing coffee, however, showed increases, except Bahia and Santa Catharina, where there was an average decrease of over 45 per cent. The increase in Rio de Janeiro amounted to 30.4 per cent., in Sao Paulo to 120.3 per cent., and in Espirito Santo to 3 per cent., all compared with the year before. As compared with the previous banner crop year of 1901-2, there was a decrease in all the States except Sao Paulo of about 27.5 per cent. It is evident, therefore, that the possibilities of Brazilian coffee production have not been reached in the monster crop just gathered. Had other States than Sao Paulo produced as much coffee as they did in 1901-2 the total this year would have exceeded 22,000,000 bags. Had there been the same increase in all the other States as there was in Sao Paulo the crop would have amounted to 24,321,831 bags of coffee. While it is quite unlikely that all the States of Brazil shall have a monster crop of the same product at the same time, it is evident that consuming markets must henceforth deal with the possibility that Brazil may at any time produce well toward 25,000,000 bags of coffee in one season.

While undue consideration of the possibility of the size of future coffee crops in Brazil is more or less speculative, there are one or two facts which should be taken into consideration by coffee men the world over as having a permanent bearing upon the coffee supply of the world. After its experience following the previous banner crop Brazilian Governmental authorities considered that there was an overproduction of the berry and proposed to prevent such overproduction by prohibiting by law the planting of more coffee trees and the extension of coffee acreage generally. While this legislation was not as general and as effective as it was planned, there was enough done in this direction to prevent the extension of coffee estates in the chief coffee producing centres of the country.

The result was that instead of extending their estates the coffee planters threw the strength which they would have expended in such extensions into the improvement of the estates they had. Old and broken trees were grubbed out and young and vigorous trees were planted in their stead. What before had been more or less ineffective culture became intensive culture—in some places intensive culture of the most pronounced sort. The result is that the production of coffee has been increased more generally, more uniformly, and probably more regularly from year to year than it would have been had estates been extended and cultivation continued under old

Here's A New FALL IDEA

This is the season when you begin to get busy with new ideas. The summer lassitude is gone—it's a case of good, keen business now for six months anyway.

Let one of your new ideas be to put in German-American coffees. Why? Because they're new to you and will be new to your customers. You've never handled anything like them. They are grown on the Triunfo Plantations of Central America, which are known to every coffee connoisseur in Europe and many in America.

Smooth, mellow, rich and fragrant coffees that will be welcomed with delight by everybody who likes coffee at all.

methods. Trees planted to take the places of the discarded ones are now coming into full bearing. Improved methods of culture have produced more coffee and generally better coffee from the same trees.

The coffee-producing industry of Brazil from a production standpoint is in a more healthy condition than it was, and while there will probably always be more or less fluctuation from year to year and more or less uncertainty as to crops, it is probable that there will be less of such conditions in the future than there has been in the past. It is probable that bumper crop years will be followed by poorer crops, the fat years by the lean years, but a review of the actual field and the returns from the last year's crop does not promise this necessarily.

While the relations of the United States to the coffee trade of Brazil seem to show little material change as far the the volume of coffee taken by the United States is concerned, the proportion of coffee taken by the United States has declined on the whole both as a result of the increased production of the country and of actually decreased average importations, the importations of Brazilian coffees by the United States for the last three years, including the season just closed, amounting to about 17,300,000 bags as compared with about 17,700,000 for the previous three years, including the former banner crop.

Whether this means an actual lessening of the demand for Brazilian coffee in the United States as compared with demand for coffees from other portions of the world, or is simply a part of a general readjustment of supplies covering a long period, is yet to be shown. But the tendency is significant, and the fact that the Government syndicate controlling the stock of coffee purchased in behalf of the valorization scheme has sent so large a portion of the valorization stock to European rather than American ports also is a fact to be considered.

In his message to the State General Assembly of the State of Sao Paulo, Dr. Jorge Tibirica, president of the State, gives an authoritative review of the transactions of the State Government in the scheme to "valorize" the State's immense coffee crop, which indicates the scope of the work and the indebtedness it has led to. In his message the president says:—

> In defense of our planting and commercial interests, seriously threatened by the fall of coffee prices that would necessarily have followed the exportation of the extraordinary crop of 1906-7, anticipating the execution of the valorization plan adopted at the Taubete convention, my government, in order to regulate the position of the different markets, determined to buy coffee. With this end in view, a loan of £1,000,000 (£ = $4.86) was negotiated in treasury bills in favor of the Disconto Gesellschaft of Berlin, payable in one year, and the consignment to European and American ports at long dates of coffee then acquired was negotiated with the well-known coffee houses. Later on their operations were extended and the government contracted another loan of £3,000,000 through J. Henry Schroeder & Co., of London, and the City Bank of New York, repayable in five years and with interest rate at 5 per cent. per annum. This loan is secured by the surtax of 3 francs (58 cents) charged at Santos, £1,000,000 of it being reserved for repayment to the Disconto Gesellschaft of Berlin of the treasury bills issued in their favor. Coffee buying commenced in August, 1906. By the end of the fiscal year consignments to the amount of 2,596,566 bags of coffee had been bought and paid for, on which the treasury had spent Rs. 89,017.076 $761. This expenditure was covered as follows:

By loans raised abroad, amounting to £4,000,000.	Rs. 26,972,189 $846
By drafts on the bankers' correspondents in the valorization scheme, at the rate of 80 per cent. on the value of the coffee shipped by the State, £3,454,847 and 7,253,572 marks	Rs. 62,045,786 $915
Total	Rs. 89,017,975 $761

> During the current year purchases were continued up to nearly 8,000,000 bags. This coffee is all paid for, as is also all margins consequent upon the fall of prices, and is now lying in warehouses at Havre, Hamburg, New York, Bremen, London, Antwerp and other European and American markets under consignation contracts entered into by the State, while there remain 800,000 bags at Rio and Santos to be shipped and warranted on the same conditions as the others. It is the firm intention of my government to retain the coffee thus acquired and to distribute it only as the requirements of consumption demand and at prices that will guarantee the advantages that it is the object of the government to secure to planters, with due regard to the interests of the treasury, but without troubling about other profits or losses, seeing that this is a speculative operation.

At the rate of expenditure for the 2,596,566 bags, as noted, the total expenditure of the Government for the "nearly 8,000,000 bags" has been close to, if not quite, $90,000,000. The value of 7,800,000 bags of coffee at 6.37 cents a pound, the average market price for No. 7 in New York during the week ending July 24th is $65,585,520, showing an apparent loss of about $24,000,000 for the State by reason of its purchases. Coffee men generally estimate the ultimate loss to the State at not less than this amount.

Advises Grocers to Go West.

California Correspondent Discusses Recent Irrigation Congress and Says Eastern Competition-Ridden Grocers Should Look Over the West for Business Chances.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Sacramento, Cal., Sept. 15, 1907.

I am sending you some press items of the fifteenth session of the National Irrigation Congress which just closed in this city. They show the importance this congress is assuming in national affairs.

Two very important actions taken were the adoption of two resolutions, one calling on the United States Department of Agriculture to modify its attitude toward sulphured fruits, and the other calling upon the Government for the protection of the home sugar industry. The full text of the latter resolution is as follows:—

> Resolved, That inasmuch as the acreage of sugar beets in arid America has increased amazingly during the past ten years, and such acreage will be greatly added to in the near future, thus affording our farmers an annually growing and additional income if this wealth-producing resource of the American farmer is not interfered with, we therefore protest against the enactment of any further legislation favoring Philippine sugar, and urge that legislative agitation and attacks on the sugar production of this country ceases, to the end that this great industry of arid America may be rapidly and fully developed.

It might be good business policy for some Eastern grocers who are hemmed in by chain stores and squeezed by competition to keep their eyes on some of the newly irrigated regions west of the Rockies for business chances.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—Ed.]

SELLING THE FULL LINE.

Nearly all good stores run specials. Just now we're strong on cereals—we're running on the popular kinds. We're bringing in new trade. It's up to you to sell these people their grocery needs. Many of them are after the cut prices. Go easy. Don't let them feel that we're sorry we cut the price or that it was intended for a bait.

Be pleasant about it. But remember that she uses flour and tea, coffee and rice, butter and lard. Quote these. Remark about the success we're having with Mara—Mexican coffee—and tell her we're keeping creamery butter down to 32 cents per pound. Understand we expect you will write lots of orders for the cut-price goods. But that is merely writing what you're asked to write. The "full line" is what you must have before you at all times.

A man can make himself a nuisance to the customer and he can make himself a boon. Beware of forcing things. Get her confidence. Be sincere. She'll respect you for your interest in the firm and her

RUNNING DOWN GOODS.

You must not run down standard goods or in fact any goods that are worthy of being on sale. Royal baking powder, Baker's cocoa, Force, and such things as these are sold close to be sure, and they too often stand between you and your commission goods.

But be a business man when it comes to giving your opinion. Don't let people see through your motive. Let your motive appear double-plated, not as thin as a sixpence. Hang on quality.

Bring out the full weight argument. Dwell on freshness. Repeat what other customers say and the qualities that other customers buy as well as the satisfaction the goods give.

Never be guilty of making the foolish break that it is the advertising that sells the well-known things. That's wasted breath. It's only the man on the inside that knows and appreciates that. Talk and sell your own brands when you get a good chance.

Do it on the square, though.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

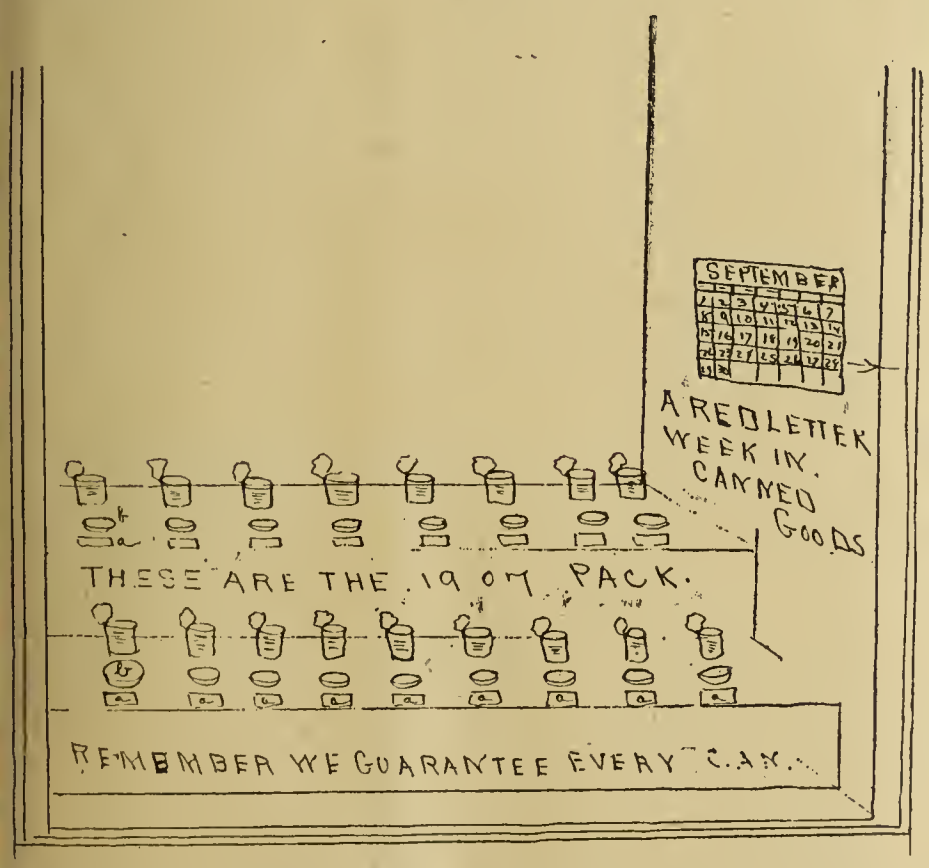
A Canned Goods Demonstration Window.

As a seasonable suggestion for, say, the latter end of the present month or October, a window devoted to canned goods might repay the retail grocer.

A window should be a groceryman's valuable asset. He might think the opening of a few canned vegetables a little expensive, but in selling an article that is inclosed in a can the customer always likes to see the quality of the goods.

In a window that is three or four feet deep make a platform like a pair of steps, say twelve inches high and twelve inches tread. This can be done with four hemlock boards or a few pea or corn cases. Have them, say, a foot back from the window. Place some clean white paper or a pretty colored crepe paper in front.

Then cover your step with clean paper. Arrange glass dishes or china bowls in even row (marked "b".) Fill them with the vegetables like this:—



First a dish of large peas, then the medium size, then the extra sifted. After them a dish of crushed corn and one of shoepeg, then a dish of good grade tomatoes, then one of butter beans, and cut string, then one of succotash, or as nearly as he might wish to display.

In opening the cans cut each lid so that each one will be even on the side and the name of the article displayed in front, placing each back of the corresponding article in the dish. In front of each dish a neatly lettered card (marked "a") with the price per can, per dozen, per case, should be placed.

On the top do the same with the new canned fruits. Peaches sliced and halved, apricots halved and sliced, bartlett pears, white cherries and black cherries, also red pie cherries. The number of fruits or vegetables to be governed by the size of the window.

In front of each step put some lettering, such as shown in the design. On the side of the window or on the glass in front make a calendar of the month and the week you are displaying the goods mark in red ink. Underneath print

A RED LETTER WEEK IN CANNED GOODS

Clean your window often because dust, dirt and dead flies do not help to sell goods.

HOLDING ON AND LETTING GO

There are two steps toward business success of any kind.

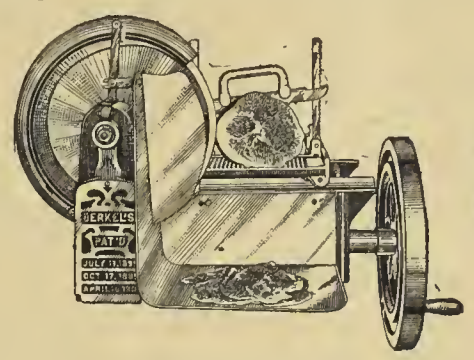
The first is holding on to our dollars, piling them up, making each of them work for us.

That is the foundation-stone of fortune.

But no one can build very high on that foundation unless he knows the second step.

Opportunity visits us every day; and many times the expenditure of a few dollars now means the return of many dollars later.

That's what distinguishes the successful merchant from the plodder—knowing when to let go.



For instance, the installation of an AMERICAN SLICING MACHINE now means the return of many times the outlay in increased trade and profit.

Eight thousand merchants—successful merchants—have proved this for themselves.

We want you to prove it for yourself.

By the way, you can if you desire, get the machine with no investment whatever.

Here Is —Something— New

The Durham Display Cake Cabinet was invented and perfected by a grocer to do away with the sample fiend, who makes a lunch on cakes and crackers—at your expense. It not only does this, but here are some of the other things it does:

It displays cakes and crackers to the best advantage, acting as a standing advertisement by keeping them constantly before your customers.

It saves time and labor and prevents mistakes in filling orders.

It protects your cakes from dust and moisture.

It prevents sampling—the saving from this alone will soon pay for a Cabinet.

The Durham Display Cabinet is made of highly polished oak, is light in weight and occupies but little floor space.

It is made in sizes to hold 12, 16, 20 and 24 cans of standard size. Special sizes to order.

The cans rest upon pivoted, elevated roller trays, being easy to slide in and out and cannot get out of order.

You need and can afford to have one.

These Plans Have Brought Business

A Handful of Good Breezy Schemes Calculated to Stir the Dry Bones in Your Store. All Have Been in Actual Use With Success.

[The following special plans for booming business at special times or during periods of natural dullness, have been collected from actual experience by Butler Brothers, of Chicago, and are reproduced here for use by any reader who may care to adapt them. The strong feature about them is that they have all been actually used.]

A Western firm brought out the somewhat unusual idea of having a chain of sales for six days. Thus food choppers were scheduled for Monday; washing machines for Tuesday; bread mixers for Wednesday, etc. Quite a novel idea in connection was the offering of prizes to boys and girls for obtaining the signature of ladies showing that they (the ladies, of course) read the ad. The firm offered $3 to the boy or girl getting the most signatures, $1.50 to the second, $1 to the third and 25 cents to each of the next ten. No prize, however, was to be awarded for less than ten signatures. The aggregate number of signatures received was 1,885, and the matter was talked of a great deal in the town. In addition the local paper wrote up the affair and printed the names of the children who had won prizes. There is no reason why the same or similar plan cannot be used successfully in almost any town in any line.

* * *

A tea store, recently opened in an Idaho city, gives a twenty per cent. rebate coupon with every purchase. To emphasize this feature during their opening, a $1 bill was presented to every customer who made a purchase of $5. A show window was filled with a great pile of paper money.

* * *

A Connecticut store is making a hit with its women patrons by giving back to them all new, clean money when making change. The practice has been tried for some months, and, it is said, attracts favorable attention.

* * *

An Ohio store held an anniversary sale lately and celebrated the occasion by giving substantial leather purses containing money with $5 and $10 purchases. The plan was thus explained in an advertisement: "With every purchase of $10 or over you may draw a purse from a basket. These purses contain $1, $2, $2.50, $3, $4 and $5. With every purchase of $5 and up to $10, you may draw from a basket a purse containing 50c., $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50. Every buyer gets a draw, and he is sure to get a prize of one of the above amounts. The man buying $10 worth is just as liable to get a $5 purse as if he purchased more. Saturday a man who bought $5 worth drew a purse containing $2.50. Another who bought $10 worth drew a $4 purse."

* * *

A Wisconsin store is giving a motor cycle to the holder of the lucky ticket, in this case the fiftieth drawn, at the drawing which takes place this month. A ticket is given with each 50 cents purchased. In the first six weeks, over 15,000 tickets had been given out.

* * *

An interesting example of courteous treatment of a competitor was recently shown in a Massachusetts city when a new store was opened. One of the local stores adopted the unique policy of advertising the fact in advance. It extended congratulations and stated the high esteem in which the promotors of the new enterprise were held, expressing good will and best wishes for their prosperity. Such a broad-minded policy certainly was the best kind of an advertisement for the store following it, for it showed the public that it felt it had nothing to fear from its competitors.

* * *

A big Illinois store gets out on certain days advertisements of "Tomorrow's Best Bargains," briefly describing an offering from each of a number of departments, without illustrations or any display, save the firm name cut and a very brief introductory statement.

* * *

A Michigan firm recently found toilet soap a very successful premium. They started a nineteen-day sale. The feature of this sale was the giving of a ticket with every 25-cent purchase. Four of these tickets entitled the customer to a cake of toilet soap. One gentleman and his wife made a single purchase of $42, getting forty-two cakes of soap. A number of instances were known in which purchases were made by customers expressly for the purpose of getting the soap. The last day of the sale was practically as good as the first, although it was prolonged to five weeks.

An Iowa firm has recently conducted a "hidden word" contest and found it one of the best plans it had ever used. The words, "your store," were selected as the hidden words. The contestants were required to mark the ads. by underscoring these words correctly and to send in the ads. each week. One hundred dollars was given in prizes. The contest lasted about a month. At the end there were only ten or twelve who sent in the ads. The winner had several thousand ads. correctly marked to her credit. The value of the contest is that it gets a large number of people in the merchant's town to reading his ads carefully.

The retail stores in a small California city are making strenuous efforts to keep trade at home. Because of the rapid interurban trolley service it is a great temptation to residents to go to the big near-by city to do their shopping. To make home trading more of an inducement the merchants are giving presents with each purchase, varying them and featuring them each day in their advertising. One feature was roller skate day for the children, a pair of roller skates being given with all purchases beyond a certain limit.

Twice a year every clerk and stenographer employed by one of our Illinois customers receives a check proportionate to the volume of the firm's business and the employee's salary. The total amount thus paid out in the five years since the plan was adopted has exceeded $4,000, and, owing to the increasing business of the firm, the dividends have each year grown larger. The firm declares, however, that it sees no reason to feel dissatisfied with the plan. Like other good things, it costs something, but the firm believes it has profited from the increased interest felt by all those connected with it and by the cordial relations which have at all times existed between employer and employee.

The Rice Campaign.

Allegheny, Pa., Sept. 11, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In your issue of August 5th of the "Grocery World," on page 10, under the heading of "Big New Concern to Boom Rice," you give the address of the secretary, Mortimer S. Bate, New York City.

This proposition of package rice interests us very much and I would thank you very kindly if you would give me the proper address of the officials of this company. We desire to take this matter up with them.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH C. KANE,
Secretary.

The "Grocery World" regrets that the only addresses it has are the ones given in the original article. One of the largest rice concerns in New York City is Orme, Sutton & Co., perhaps a letter to them would bring the address.

The Jamestown Exposition.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 17, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We would like to call your attention to the Jamestown Exposition and especially to the Foods' Product Building. A great many of your advertisers have demonstrations there, some of them exceedingly handsome ones, and we have seen little or nothing in your good paper regarding this exposition.

For comparison we would say that it is far ahead of the Buffalo, and really one of the most interesting expositions that has ever been held from an historical standpoint.

We have entertained at our booth more literary men, professors, teachers, army and navy men than ever before in the history of any exposition. In fact, the class of trade that is going there, to a large extent, just at this time, is a very appreciative trade.

The exposition is thoroughly worth anyone's time to go there and it will repay them a hundredfold.

The cheap newspaper talk which was given out at first was mostly uncalled for, and, like all bad news, travels fast, but we do believe it is now worthy and will pay you to send a representative there and get cuts and write-ups.

With kindest regards, beg to remain,

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & Co.

The "Grocery World" published an article on the Jamestown Exposition several months ago.

Wants Package Coffee Ground.

Chadds Ford, Pa., Sept. 20, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I inclose you a few lines that I have often thought of doing. It is the season of year now when the wonderful Ariosa is hard to grind and some of our trade don't forget to say "Grind it fine please." And you know how that jars one who has it to do these sultry days. I know there are others who have the same kindly feeling towards the Ariosa. I have often thought the "Grocery World" could get the opinion of we grocers who have to wear ourselves away getting so little out of this package. I think the grocers would be thankful if you could bring it about so it would be ground before packing.

I know you will do a big favor for us felows who have to have it in stock.

Let's hear from the grinders.

Yours truly,
H. K. GALLAGHER.

Nordlinger on Coffee.

New York, Sept. 20, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Allowing for the delay in marketing the Brazil crop, also giving due weight to the storage facilities in the interior, we believe to-day that not more than about 10,500,000 bags will come forward at Rio and Santos during the current crop year. This calculation is based purely and simply on the receipts so far, after allowing for some of the causes which helped to make them as small as they were.

In addition we expect about 600,000 bags of Victorias and Bahias to come forward.

In accordance with the best information at hand there will be a considerable shortage in the crops of Central America and the East Indies; so that we are not justified in expecting more than 3,000,000 bags of mill coffees to come forward during during the present crop year.

Thus a world's production of only 14,000,000 bags is indicated, and this is to provide for a consumption of 17,500,000 to 18,000,000 bags, which, if our figures are correct, would bring the heretofore thought of precarious and hazardous undertaking of the Sao Paulo Government (the valorization plan) much nearer to a successful issue than even the well-wishers of the Government could expect.

Should another small crop follow the present one, which is the current topic of the day—but we do not share in that belief—the coffee trade all over the world would be compelled to draw a part of their supplies from the Government holdings, which would naturally imply an advance in the price to the average cost of the Government. But a small crop next year is not by any means assured. The spring season in Brazil was very late in setting in. On the other hand, the trees had a long and beneficial rest. The soil was well nourished by plentiful rains; so that with seasonable weather conditions from now on a fairly good crop can still be raised. By that we do not mean a bumper crop like last year's (such a crop is entirely out of all range of possibilities with the weakened condition of the trees), but we mean a crop large enough to fill the world's requirements.

Yours truly,
HENRY NORDLINGER & Co.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 20, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market continues very active with a very healthy demand throughout the list, and every great improvement in the general demand will, no doubt, have its effect on prices.

Pepper.—Prices are practically unchanged, but there is a firmer feeling in the market.

White Pepper.—Spot stocks are limited. The demand is very good, prices being exceedingly low.

Cayennes are in good demand, especially Bright Chillies for pickling.

Cloves.—Demand very steady; cables now quote higher prices.

Nutmegs.—Large lots have been turned over during the past week. Dealers take up all cheap parcels offered.

The Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 20, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The demand for tomatoes this week has been heavy. Packers are now having the glut of the season, and a good many tomatoes are going into cans. Conditions just at present are good for packing, though of course it is impossible to say how long the glut will last. The present supply of raw stock will enable packers to work off their short orders, and may possibly in the near future loosen up things somewhat in the tomato market. The large buying, however, for spot as well as future delivery indicates that a great many more tomatoes are still wanted, notwithstanding the unusually heavy sales which have already been made. Just at present offerings of tomatoes are not heavy.

We are having a large demand for peaches of all kinds, but it is a difficult matter to fill orders. In fact, we are only able to fill a portion of the orders which are coming in, and the market is showing a steady upward tendency.

Apples.—The market is in strong shape at 95 cents per dozen for No. 3s and $3.15 per dozen for No. 10s. Packing is going on slowly.

Pineapple.—The market continues in strong shape, owing to light stocks.

Yours truly,
Thos. G. Cranwell & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 20, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The developments in the tomato market have been of more than ordinary interest. There was a continuation right up to the close of business of the heavy buying of tomatoes in this market by Western jobbers and canners at full prices, and many of the orders came from the centre of the Western tomato packing sections. Those purchases added to the buying by jobbers in all other sections of the country caused a very active and strong market and the outlook is for a continuation of the activity during the balance of this month. Up to this date the tomato canners have had about all they could do to get enough raw tomatoes to run their canneries a full day and many of them were unable to do so because, with the exception of one day during the week, the receipts were not large enough to supply all the canneries fully. With a continuation of the favorable weather the receipts of raw tomatoes should be larger next week. Meantime the market for the canned article shows a very strong feeling all along the line and they are worth immediate attention.

Again this week, every staple article in the line of canned fruits and vegetables was active in this market, and there does not seem to be a weak spot in the whole list. The following articles, in addition to tomatoes, were all quite active with a decidedly upward tendency as to prices, namely, string beans, lima beans, peas, corn, sweet potatoes, apples, peaches and berries of all kinds, and there were further advances in the prices. There will be very light stocks of canned goods left in the hands of the packers in this market after all the contracts for fall delivery are filled, and it will be ten long months before the next packing season rolls around.

Yours truly,
Thos. J. Meehan & Co.

First Almeria Grapes on the Way.

The first direct boat leaving Almeria for America will reach New York in September and will carry something like 10,000 barrels of Almeria grapes. The season is slightly early owing to excellent weather conditions, and if these continue during the cutting of the fruit buyers in the United States may be reasonably sure of good fruit. Reports have gone forth that the total number of barrels this fall would reach 2,500,000, but the latest advices from all parts of the Province indicate that the sanguine expectations of two months ago will scarcely be realized. Conservative estimates at present place the total crop at about 2,000,000 barrels. The Fruit Shippers' Association will not allow more than 25,000 barrels to be loaded in any one boat for New York, since the shipments last year of 30,000 and 40,000 barrels in one steamer did not prove to be favorable to good delivery. There will also be direct boats to Boston and one or two to Philadelphia.

Some One Has Said

"Discontent is the Mother of Progress and the Ideal is its Beacon Light." Are you discontented with the progress of your business, my grocery friend? If you are, order a case of Mapleine. It is the ideal maple flavoring and will act as a beacon light of trade for you. Mapleine is a pure vegetable extract made from roots and herbs. It has even a more delicate flavor than maple and is unsurpassed for flavoring bon-bons, cakes, desserts, ices, etc., and makes a syrup better than maple at a cost of 59½c. per gallon.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is bes explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to th "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and valu to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated wi appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. Breckenridge.

Grape Sugar.

This is the name given to solidified glucose, and may be produced from the same substances as liquid glucose, but properly from grapes. The methods pursued in nearly all the refineries are, however, now identical. Wet starch obtained from potatoes, Indian corn, etc., is boiled in so much sulphuric acid and water. This acid makes part of the oxygen and hydrogen in the water unite with the carbon in the starch, and turns it sweet, after which the acid is taken out with chalk.

The production of grape sugar and liquid glucose is now mostly carried on in America, where corn is most plentiful and cheap, but large quantities are also made in Germany from potatoes, which are specially grown for the purpose over a great extent of land in certain districts.

Green Teas.

The finest green teas consist of the young unopened leaf buds of the tea plant, and are known best in England as Hyson, Hyson Skin, Young Hyson, Gunpowder, Imperial and Twankay.

These are dried by a quicker process and at a higher temperature than black teas, and therefore contain less moisture. The color is or should be entirely due to the rapid drying of the fresh gathered leaves which prevents the chlorophyl, or natural green color, undergoing much alteration.

In curing the leaves they are worked up into little rolls by hand and roasted in dirty copper pans over a wood fire within an hour or two of being gathered, usually in the afternoon, while the leaves for black tea are allowed to lie in heaps for ten or twelve hours, during which time they undergo a sort of fermentation and are dried very slowly. In China the brighter green leaves of the hardiest plants are usually selected for making into the best green teas.

Green teas are prepared very extensively in both China and Japan.

Groats or Grits.

These are the seeds or kernels of oats which have merely been deprived of their exterior integuments or husk.

This decortication is generally done in mills, some of which also cut the grain into two or three pieces, while some leave the grain in its proper form. They are used chiefly for making gruel and for thickening broths, soups, etc.

WE HAVE THE BEST OF REASONS FOR TALKING ABOUT IT

We make a point of exploiting the fact that you will find "The Bottom as Good as the Top" in Apelpi Evaporated Apples, simply because usually the top is very much better than the bottom. We pride ourselves on this particular brand, have built up a big demand for it on its quality alone—you can do the same thing.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Your Question Answered

"Why should you go to the expense of buying Safety Ark Egg Carriers when you can do as you've done for years—put them in a bag?"

First, because it saves all the breakage. You can break eggs packed in Safety Carriers, but you won't unless you deliberately try to. Doesn't that make them worth while in itself?

Second, because it's up-to-date storekeeping to use them. That ought to commend itself to you also.

But as to "going to the expense," there is no expense to speak of. Safety Ark Egg Carriers are absurdly cheap, and it costs only a trifle more to have your advertisement printed on them.

They're a good thing, brother.

They'd Want to Get Square

If you're skeptical that a cash register as moderate-priced as the Standard Cash Register can do what we say it can, write us for a list of merchants who have one. Then write them about it; they'll tell the truth, for if the register has failed them they'll be only too glad to get square.

We're pretty strong in our claims for the Standard Cash Register, but the careful little machine will make good every one. Keeps track of all sales, cash or credit, and who makes them.

Do You Know Why the Department Stores Do So Much Business?

It's because they attract people to their stores. The most effective method of doing this is by attractively decorated windows, made bright as day by electricity. Grocers take a leaf from the Department Store's book—dress your windows invitingly; put signs in them calling attention to bargains and light the displays so that passers-by can't help seeing them. You will bring enough new customers into your store in a day to pay the cost for a month.

While your store is closed and you are off duty, make your windows win new trade for you—a representative will call and show you how it can be done and what it will cost if you will drop a card or phone.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

YOU SEE IT COMING

FILLING A GLASS LAMP FONT is a very simple operation because the surface of the contents is seen rising toward the top. Carelessness is the only excuse for pouring in too much and going beyond the capacity.

A METAL FONT is not so easily filled because you can only guess how much is in it. Experience may enable you to guess fairly close but absolute accuracy is Impossible.

OLD STYLE SCALES present the same difficulties. No weight is shown until you have too much and the scale goes down. You must either take a little out or suffer a loss.

MONEYWEIGHT AUTOMATIC SCALES show at all times the weight on the scale and you pour on the goods until the correct weight or money value is indicated. This means a prevention of loss and a saving of money.

OLD STYLE scales prevent you from seeing their defects with the accompanying loss of merchandise and profit.

We ask the opportunity of showing you what it amounts to. The coupon will send our representative to you.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

Pennsylvania Food Department Decides Against Sulphured Fruits

Issues Rule 11, Which Says That Fruits Containing Sulphurous Acid Will Be Treated As Against the Law. Necessarily the Rule Applies to Molasses and Glucose. Federal Attitude Toward Sulphuring Seems Changing. Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association Stops Sale of Dried Fruits at Once.

True to his promise, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, of Pennsylvania, has taken up the status of sulphured dried fruits during the past week, and seems to have decided it. Under date of September 25th, the following addition to the State rules and regulations was sent to the "Grocery World":—

Issued September 25, 1907.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Dairy and Food Division.

Supplement No. 2 to Rules and Regulations prepared by the Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, in pursuance of Section 3 of the Act of June 1, 1907.

RULE No. 11.—EVAPORATED FRUITS.

Rule 11. It should be understood by the trade and the public that Rule 2, specifically referring to meat and other articles of food, covers evaporated fruits, and that if said fruits contain any added substance or ingredient which is poisonous or injurious to health, such as sulphurous acid, the sale thereof will be treated as a violation of the law.

JAMES FOUST,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

This seems definite enough at first reading, but when it is considered in the light of the department's attitude upon other food problems, it ceases to be definite to any adequate degree. The department has always affirmed benzoate of soda to be in violation of the law, yet it has never interfered with its use. In order to obtain specific and positive information as to what the department really intends to do, the "Grocery World" wired the Commissioner immediately upon receipt of Rule 11 as follows: "Does Rule 11 mean that you will positively prosecute dried fruits containing minimum sulphur?

The answer was as follows:—

Fruits which contain any added substance or ingredients which is poisonous or injurious to health, such as sulphurous acid, proceedings will be instituted.

JAMES FOUST.

Rule 2, referred to in the above, is again reproduced:—

> The use of boric acid, salicylic acid or sulphites in meats or other articles of food will be regarded as an adulteration, and treated accordingly. Any poisonous or deleterious preservative or colored matter applied externally which has been permitted to permeate or penetrate the meat or other food product, or any portion thereof, will be regarded as an adulteration.

In Rule 11 the Commissioner mentions nothing but dried fruits; nevertheless his ruling affects New Orleans molasses, all of the coming crop of which will contain sulphur, and it also affects glucose which contains sulphites. If sulphured dried fruits are illegal, so is sulphured molasses and all products containing sulphur or sulphites, and the Commissioner must enforce the law against them all.

Any attempt to enforce Rule 11 against all of the above universally sold products will doubtless raise quite a time.

Immediately upon receipt of a copy of the above rule the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association advised all of its members to discontinue the sale of all dried fruits. This was at once complied with by a very large number.

Decidedly apropos of the Pennsylvania Commissioner's attitude upon the sulphur question is a dispatch from California, where physicians in the Federal Government's employ are investigating the use of sulphur in fruits and the effect it has upon the human health. The dispatch is as follows:—

> According to the Fresno "Republican," Dr. Bigelow, the Federal expert, who has been making tests and experiments in various fruit-growing centres of California for several weeks, and is at present in Suisun experimenting with the sulphuring of fruits at the J. K. Armsby Company's packing house, has expressed himself to the California fruit growers in a way which leads them to believe that the ban on sulphuring fruit will be entirely removed.
>
> In company with Professor Jaffa, head of the chemistry department of the University of California, Dr. Bigelow has been looking over the sulphuring of the various kinds of fruit, and though he will not give out any information until his recommendations have been officially acted upon in Washington, he is known to have changed his views radically in reference to sulphuring. Observation at first hand and a thorough inspection of the fruit orchards and packing houses in all the important fruit centres of the State, with the result of the experiments made under Professor's Jaffa's instructions at the University laboratories, have changed his opinions, and when he returns to Washington to report to Secretary Wilson upon his observations in California his report will contain a recommendation that the sulphuring of fruits be allowed to continue.
>
> It is expected that supplementary to this recommendation will be one that the fruit men exercise more care in their methods.
>
> Chief Chemist Ralph Gould, who is now in charge of the government experiments being made by a corps of twenty assistant chemists in the many fruit-packing towns, is finishing up the tests on over 3,000 samples of sulphured fruit gathered from the field by his experts. These samples are being passed upon at the rate of about twenty-five a day, and the net result will soon be made known to the public.

More Bad Syrup and Molasses Last Season Than for Years.

Exclusion of Sulphur Shortens the Keeping Qualities of Both Products. Dealers Report More Fermented Syrup and Sour Molasses Than for Many Seasons. May Be Better This Season.

The 1906-7 syrup season is over and that of 1907-8 is about to begin. As the Washington authorities have decided that sulphur may be used in molasses for the present, it is expected that the coming season will be comparatively uneventful.

The season just over, however, has shown in a very marked degree the effect of the campaign against goods bleached with sulphur. Not in many years have dealers reported as much fermented syrup as last season. What is referred to now is compound syrup, and the unquestionable reason why so much of it fermented is that the glucose with which it was mixed contained no sulphur. The glucose refiners used sulphur primarily as a bleach; nevertheless it had a distinct preservative effect, and syrup mixed with sulphited glucose had much longer keeping qualities than syrup containing glucose that was not sulphited.

This condition is expected to cure itself at least to some extent during the coming season through the fact that the department now permits the use of 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. of sulphur, and the syrup mixers can now get sulphited glucose again if they want it.

The past season tells the same story for molasses. One large handler states that he has had more sour molasses during the past season than for the ten preceding years combined. This comes from the fact that although the Department of Agriculture decided several months ago that sulphur could still be used, many planters used little or none. The result was molasses that was neither up to the standard in color or keeping quality.

It is possible to prevent molasses from souring by high boiling, but that process hurts the color and reduces the price several cents per gallon.

Federal Government May Get After Pittsburg Produce Men.

Attorney-General Bonaparte Writes to Pittsburg Retailers That He Will Take the Matter Up If They Can Convict Wholesale Produce Dealers of Conspiracy.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 27, 1907.

In the last issue a statement was made that the associated retail grocers of Pittsburg, Pa., who are fighting the Wholesale Produce Dealers' Association of this city on the charge of illegitimately advancing the prices of fruits and produce, had appealed to President Roosevelt for relief. That the Federal Government may actually take a hand in the fight is made evident from the following letter received here during the week by Attorney-General Bonaparte:—

> Dear Sir:—I am duly in receipt of your letter of the 11th instant in reference to the suit against the Pittsburg Produce Trade Association. If you will submit to this department any facts and circumstances which indicates that the corporation referred to in your letter, or any of its officers or members, can be convicted of a violation of the Federal laws, such information will receive careful attention.

It is charged by the local suitors that the firms connected with the members of the Pittsburg Produce Trade Association aid it in raising the prices of foodstuffs in this city, and in all parts of the country, and assist in what is said to be a conspiracy to control the supply and demand for all produce, thus permitting trust operations to be made rampant and to allow the prices to be raised at will regardless of the crop conditions.

rade Uneasy Over Prices. Retailers Not Always Getting Back Advances They Are Compelled to Pay. Exit Five-cent Extract. Oleo Men Take Heart. Red Peppers Not Spices or Marmalade Jelly.

ecial correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 27, 1907.

Questions of prices are worrying tailers as well as wholesale dealers an unusual extent. Large deal-s say that they cannot remember time when there were so many ements of uncertainty in the situ-ion. Several concerns which send it price catalogues and house or-ans at intervals are delaying the rrent issues because of the diffi-lty of placing prices on various nes of food on which quotations re readily given under ordinary rcumstances.

Some dealers have adopted the olicy of making no change in prices f the stock which they have on and and which was bought at old uotations, although they are rea-onably certain that for new stock ey will have to give more money.)ne reason for doing this is to get d of everything bearing old labels, bout which a question may be aised at any time. Even if the au-orities are satisfied with the labels is realized that the customers may ot be, as the public is much more articular than formerly.

On new stock the retailers are not etting, in many cases, the advance hich they are compelled to pay. n fact, it is said that the higher ost of materials and production in uite a number of lines has been istributed among the various hand-ers, from the packer to the retailer, vithout adding anything to what he public pays. The prediction is nade in some quarters that a some-vhat higher level of the prices harged the public is certain to ome, especially in various kinds of anned vegetables and fruit, flavor-ng extracts, spices and cereals.

An immediate effect of the pure ood law has been the practical limination of the 5-cent bottles of lavoring extracts, about which there ad been much complaint on the art of many people in the trade. While the cheaper trade has been ffected, no difference has been nade in the retail price of the bet-er grades of extracts. In stores n which the very cheap grades were ot sold there has been no change. Some say that if the cost of the raw materials remains as high as at present it will become necessary to get higher prices all around.

The popular prices of package goods in this city have run in 10, 15 and 20 cents, and the talk is of making advances so that 10-cent packages, in some instances, shall bring 25 cents for two, with corresponding increases of price on the larger sizes. The manufacturers are confronted with the higher cost of many kinds of material and labor, so that they must either reduce the size of the packages or get such high prices as will oblige the retailer in his turn to ask more from the consumer.

As was expected, the Consolidated Milk Exchange, at its meeting Wednesday, agreed to pay the producers ½ cent advance per quart, making the price $1.91 for a 40-quart can, inside the 26-cent freight zone. The members of the exchange hope that their action will increase the offerings of milk, which the producers have been sending in larger quantities than usual to the creameries and cheese factories, and thus restore to the normal the supplies, which of late have been scarcely sufficient for the needs of the city.

One of the large milk companies this week advanced the retail price of milk delivered in bottles from 8 to 9 cents a quart. This company gets 10 cents for pasteurized milk and 15 cents for milk certified by the Board of Health to be pure and fresh. Other companies have not advanced their prices of 8 cents for ordinary and 10 cents for certified milk.

Naturally the indications that a general advance in the price of milk is coming have aroused talk among those who try to ascribe everything unpleasant to the operations of one or another trust. According to their point of view, the company which has put up its prices first is merely feeling the sentiment of the people to see if they will stand higher prices, and this company was selected for the test because it has the trade of the class of people who can afford to pay top notch prices. It is further said that the large receivers who are members of the exchange and the producers have been for a long time preparing to put up the prices at the first favorable opportunity. All this is, of course, denied by the milk people. The average of the daily receipts of milk so far this year has been 39,683 cans, each of 40 quarts, and this is said to be somewhat below the average of last year for the corresponding period.

Austin, Nichols & Co. were overruled Tuesday by the Board of United States General Appraisers in a case involving the status of red peppers or pimentos, preserved in liquid and imported in cans, for which free entry was asked. The Board declared in an opinion that the peppers are not naturally ground or used in a ground condition and are not spices, and so did not come under the description of pimentos unground, which are free.

Oleomargarine interests are encouraged by the high price of butter to begin a new campaign to get rid of the special tax of 10 cents a pound on the product, and it is said to be quite certain that a vigorous effort will be made to get the necessary legislation at the coming session of Congress. The argument to be used is that the product is a wholesome food and that if it were relieved of the special tax it would check the creameries from putting up prices as at present. The plan to be advocated is to have a law to prohibit coloring so that oleomargarine will not be fraudulently sold as butter, but will be sold for just what it is.

Notice has been received at the New York Mercantile Exchange from Washington that butter having more than 16 per cent. of moisture will be considered as adulterated or process butter and will be subject to the special tax. This must be paid by the receiver in the city if he buys outright, but if he receives the butter on consignment the tax will be placed on the creamery.

The difference between marmalade and jelly was pointed out by the Board in a case brought by Bogle & Scott, who imported a quantity of orange marmalade on which a duty was assessed of 1 cent a pound in addition to an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. If the article were jelly the ad valorem duty only would be collected and 1 cent a pound would be saved to the importers. It was found by the Board that the marmalade was made of bitter orange juice, with ground skin and pulp, and with sugar added. A jelly, it was pointed out, is made by cooking the juice of fruit with sugar. Accordingly the importers were required to pay the higher duty. Similarly it was held that berry jams are not jelly.

The fall meeting of the Executive Board of the New York State Association of Retail Grocers will be held Tuesday, October 8th, in the rooms of the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn. The principal subject to be discussed, it is understood, is the plan for extending and building up the State society in various cities by keeping an organizer in the field, the expenses to be met by asking all members to contribute $1 or more each. Quite a number of contributions have been received since the State convention, when the plan was approved, but the response has not yet been at all general.

It is also possible that legislative and other subjects will be considered. The State Legislature will be in session again after the coming holidays and the grocers will make a fight for laws in which they are interested.

Fire early Monday morning destroyed the three upper floors of the building at Beach and Washington streets, occupied by De Groff & Son, wholesale grocers. The loss on building and stock was estimated at $200,000. The firm is conducting business without interruption, which shows enterprise and hustling qualities.

Damages to the stock of the Wm. H. Baker Chocolate Co., in its factory 49 Clymer street, Brooklyn, was caused by a fire last Saturday, and the loss was estimated at $5,000. A large quantity of cocoa beans was burned.

Butter Dealers Will Henceforth Go Free.

Dealers Who Innocently Handle Excessively Watered Butter Will No Longer Be Prosecuted by Internal Revenue Officials. Hereafter Will Be Regarded as Agents of the Creameries.

Wholesale and retail dealers in butter won a concession from the United States Government last week in reference to the rather extensive sales of butter adulterated with water.

Under the present law manufacturers of butter containing more than 16 per cent. of water are compelled to pay a license of $600 a year, as makers of adulterated butter, and to pay a tax of 10 cents a pound on the amount sold. Wholesalers of such adulterated butter are required to pay a license of $480 a year, and retailers $48 a year.

The Government has been particularly active of late in prosecuting butter loaded with water, and in every case the action has been laid against the dealer if the watered butter was found in his possession. Many cases of this kind have been brought in Chicago and New York. The dealers have vigorously resented the attempt to hold them responsible, on the ground that they bought their butter from the manufacturer and could not tell whether it was excessively watered or not.

In order to secure justice a delegation of butter dealers from all the large cities went to Washington last week and saw the Internal Revenue Commissioner. To him they told their grievance, and he made a ruling on the spot that hereafter he will regard the merchants as agents of the creameries, and bring his action against the latter. This ruling will of course not apply to cases where the dealer knew that he was buying watered stock.

Local Meat License Act of 1907 Probably to Be Enforced Only Against Fresh Products

Philadelphia Health Bureau Has Changed Its Attitude and Chief Now Strongly Intimates Doubt As to Legal Right to Enforce Act Against Collateral Products. Says Retailers Need Not Procure Licenses Until Further Notice.

There is much reason to believe that the Philadelphia Department of Health has changed its mind and will make no attempt to enforce the Philadelphia meat license law of April 26, 1907, against anything but fresh meats, fish, game, poultry and shellfish. It will be remembered that at a recent conference between Dr. Abbott, chief of the bureau, and Elton J. Buckley, Esq., representing certain trade interests, the chief was extremely positive in his assertions that the law applied to and would be enforced against minee-meat, dried beef and other provisions, canned meats, sausage and canned poultry, fish, etc.

Mr. Buckley took the view that the statute had no application except to fresh products, and at the suggestion of Dr. Abbott filed a brief of argument in support of that contention. Another conference between the chief and the attorney was held on Wednesday of the past week, and at this Dr. Abbott showed a decided change of attitude. He stated that while the department had not definitely decided what to do in the matter at issue, it had still occurred to him that if the application of the act as he had originally intended would involve the procuring of a license by every grocer in Philadelphia (which it unquestionably would) he was doubtful as to his legal right to go so far.

The chief's strong intimation was that the department would probably make no effort to enforce the law against anything but fresh products. He stated definitely at the close of the conference that until further notice a retail grocer need not procure a license for handling mince-meat, dried beef, canned meats, provisions, canned poultry or canned fish.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

The Pennsylvania Attack on Dried Fruits.

Nothing more revolutionary has ever threatened the grocery trade of Pennsylvania than Rule 11, just issued by Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, which decides that dried fruits bleached with sulphur will be considered in violation of the law. Former Commissioner Warren's attack upon sulphited glucose was a heavy campaign, but the brunt of that fell upon the confectionery trade. If Rule 11 is susceptible of legal enforcement every wholesale and retail grocer in Pennsylvania, probably numbering more than 15,000, will be amenable to prosecution. Not only for selling dried fruits, but as well for selling New Orleans molasses, every gallon of which will this year be bleached with sulphur. For while Rule 11 ostensibly covers dried fruits only, it necessarily covers all other foods containing sulphur, which molasses does.

It would seem as if the revolutionary character of his contemplated campaign would inspire Commissioner Foust to hesitate a long while before attacking a product which has been staple and standard for years, which has never caused illness so far as is known, and which is permitted to be sold by the Federal Government under a law identical with the State law in the wording of its applicable part. However, he seems to have resolved to go ahead, and the sooner the better. The campaign will doubtless seriously disorganize the trade, but there is this compensation—out of it the truth will come, and the trade will no longer be at the mercy of rules and regulations. The "Grocery World's" opinion is that the Commissioner cannot win his case, first, because sulphured fruits are protected under the Federal regulations, and second, because the percentage of sulphur they contain does not render them injurious to health. We admit that there are many dried fruits on the market which contain much more than the Federal minimum of 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. The legal status of these is much less certain.

A word as to the way the Commissioner's cases are to be brought. There are two courses open to him: The first is to order inspectors to bring cases all over the State, after the manner of the recent glucose campaign. This course will congest the courts with petty cases, terrorize hundreds of dealers into paying their penalties in order to escape trouble, and generally upset and stampede the trade. The other course is to quietly and amicably bring one test case. The only advantage to the department which the first plan has over the second is that it will yield a lot of fines. As a means to the end of deciding the issue it is much inferior to the test case, because of the possibility of conflicting proceedings and conflicting decisions. And since Commissioner Foust has repeatedly declared that the collection of fines was not his object, and since he has also asserted that his desire was not to oppress the trade, the "Grocery World" does not expect him to adopt that course. A test case should be brought at once.

More Tabs on Dr. Wiley.

Some other people are about to try and prove Dr. Wiley wrong in his sweeping reflections upon the use of preservatives in food. The University of Illinois, backed by the American Meat Packers' Association, will hold a series of experiments to see whether the use of saltpeter for curing meats is as harmful as Dr. Wiley says it is. It will be remembered that saltpeter has been used to cure meats for many years, and its use has always been specifically permitted together with salt, wood smoke and vinegar, these being known as the "condimental preservatives."

If the saltpeter people have the same results as the Louisiana molasses people, Dr. Wiley will hardly have a leg to stand on. As recently published, chemists employed by the molasses interests found that negroes fed on sulphured molasses actually grew fat on it. Not an iota of harm was found; in fact the result was actual benefit. The chance is that the saltpeter experiments will bring a similar disclosure. Dr. Wiley has been so extremely radical in his statements that men who know now look on everything he says as "important if true." Formerly Dr. Wiley's conclusions were accepted at once, sometimes unwillingly, but still accepted. To-day those interested investigate almost everything he says before giving it credence.

How a Druggist Adulterates.

The "Grocery World" has many times contended that the code of adulteration laws was grossly unfair in devoting about four times as much attention to the adulteration of food as to the adulteration of drugs. Take the case of the man who mixes ground olive stones with pepper. It is undeniable that he has committed a fraud and should be commensurately punished. But, after all, he has not harmed anybody very much, and 99 per cent. of all food adulteration, though frauds and wholly without excuse, are still practically harmless.

Consider in contrast thefollowing instances of drug adulteration unearthed by the Food Department of New York City:—

Of ten prescriptions calling for 15 grains of antipyrin, three contained less than 13 grains, one 16 grains, and none the right amount.

Of four prescriptions calling for 5-grain capsules of cinchonine, one contained but 2 grains, three but 2½ grains.

Of four other prescriptions calling for cinchonine in 5-grain capsules, two were short weight, one extra weight and one substitute 1.85 grain of quinine.

Of seventy prescriptions calling for 5-grain powders of phenacetin, four had 2 to 3 grains; fifteen 3 to 4 grains thirty-two less than amount called for; eighteen were overweight of this powerful drug, and one had acetandid, a dangerous drug, substituted.

Trephenin was substituted for phenacetin; fourteen out of eighty-five prescriptions for internal use were adulterated with wood alcohol. Tincture of iodine was found adulterated with wood alcohol, and paregoric contained no opium, its essential element.

Every one of the cases of adulteration here mentioned made a prescription less potent and destroyed to that extent the chance of the recovery of some patient, possibly from a fatal ailment. Can it be contended that there is any similarity between the offense of a man guilty of such things and that of a grocer who adulterates pepper? And yet in Pennsylvania and many other States there is a most comprehensive system of food laws, while there is not a single act which in any adequate degree governs the sophistication of drugs!

Does Saltpeter Hurt Meats?

The experiments to determine the effect on health and digestion of saltpeter used in curing meats and meat products, undertaken by the University of Illinois at the request and with the support of the American Meat Packers' Association, were actually put in operation last week at Urbana, Ill., the location of the University. The so-called "saltpeter squad" began its course of diet on both saltpeter-cured and non-cured meats, and the experiments will be continued for some months. These tests were undertaken as a result of the threatened prohibition by the Federal Government of the use of saltpeter in curing meats. Chief Chemist Wiley, of the Department of Agriculture, is also conducting experiments on this point, and it was desired to supplement these with investigations by the most eminent scientific authorities in a perfectly independent and unprejudiced manner. As a result a commission of scientists was chosen to supervise the tests.

Cranberries are seen in market, ruling at fair average prices for the season—$7 per barrel for Cape Cods, and $2 per crate for Jerseys. The demand is fair.

arkin Soap Company Defies Anybody to Tax Its Canvassers iscusses Recent Pennsylvania Act Taxing Merchandise Brokers, and Says It Cannot Apply to Soap Canvassers, Most of Whom Are Doing an Interstate Commerce Business. Even Denies They Are Liable to Mercantile Tax.

ecial correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., Sept. 27, 1907.

"The municipal authorities of ottstown, Pa., according to a press ispatch, have stepped into the reach and are erecting barricades gainst soap premium mail-order ouses that must prove quite effect-e. They have passed a local ordi-ance which will compel Pottstown omen as well as men hereafter pay a $10 license for the privi-ge of soliciting orders for such oncerns."

The foreign clipping was ailed to our office without credit, nd may or may not be true.

Much interest is manifest in the lipping from the Harrisburg "Star ndependent" on the question of a icense tax for soap clubs. Elton J. Buckley, Esq., attorney for the Re-ail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, to whom the matter vas referred, says: "I am con-vinced, after a careful reading of he act and the examination of some uthorities, that the law does not pply to soap canvassers. The lat-er operate in two ways: In some ases they will take orders for full oxes, ordering same shipped direct o the buyer. This is interstate ommerce and cannot be interfered with by a State tax, regardless of the question whether the local seller is an agent or a broker. In other cases the canvasser will herself order from the manufacturer and upon receipt will parcel out to her various customers the portions purchased. In this case the essential feature of brokerage, i. e., acting for another, is lacking. The seller has sold for herself and could not be taxed either as a broker or factor, though she would be liable to a mercantile tax as a retail dealer. From no standpoint can soap canvassers be viewed as brokers in my judgment. At most, they are agents, precisely as a traveling salesman is an agent. 'A traveling salesman who exhibits samples of his employer's goods and takes orders from purchasers is not a broker, even though he be compensated for his services by commissions on the sales effected by him.'"

That the Larkin Co., of Buffalo, are alive to the situation is evidenced by the following extracts from a recent circular: "Should any one demand payment or any tax because you are a member of a Larkin club of ten or are delivering goods shipped you by us in response to an order, notify us at once, giving his name and all the facts. We will immediately take steps to protect your interest and our own.

"In every case where the goods are outside the State at the time the sale is negotiated and are shipped into it in response to an order, the transaction is one of interstate commerce. Interstate commerce is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Congress, therefore neither your State nor local authorities can pass any law or ordinance interfering therewith.

"You cannot be compelled to pay a mercantile tax because of any connection you may have with a Larkin club of ten. Rumors have frequently been spread and newspaper articles printed in various sections of the State to the effect that soap clubs were to be taxed. Pay no attention to any of them nor to the law recently passed by the Pennsylvania State Legislature taxing merchandise brokers after January 1, 1908. We will guarantee to protect you against financial loss by reason of any demand made on you to pay any tax levied upon you merely because of your being in a Larkin club or because of your soliciting orders for Larkin goods for future delivery.

"United States Supreme Court says 'No.'

"The United States Supreme Court in the recent case of Caldwell vs. N. Caldwell vs. N. Caro., 187 U. S. 622, holds that the delivery to purchasers of goods shipped from outside the State, which goods have been previously sold to such purchasers by sample or catalogue, is an act of interstate commerce and no tax can be laid upon the agent for the delivery of such outside goods. This is true even if the goods are not shipped from without the State direct to the purchasers, but are shipped to the agent who breaks the package and distributes the goods to the purchasers.

If you want to sell Syrup to-morrow as well as to-day you must sell Syrup that is regular and standard.

"Another recent case directly at point is Stockard vs. Morgan, 185 U. S. 27. The court held that 'parties who do business only for non-residents, that is, whose business is exclusively confined to soliciting orders as agents for non-resident parties, are not subject to a privilege tax for conducting such business. The fact that a broker, as such, can transact a local business as well as a business for non-residents, does not determine the matter, and if he confines himself to interstate business he can do so without becoming liable to the tax.' Quoting from another decision the court continued: Although it is said in the opinion of the State court herein that the thing taxed is the occupation of merchandise brokerage, and not the business of those employing the brokers, yet we have seen from the cases already cited that when the tax is applied to an individual within the State, selling the goods of his principal who is a non-resident of the State, it is in effect a tax upon interstate commerce and the fact is not in any wise altered by calling the tax one upon the occupation of the individual residing within the State while acting as the agent of a non-resident principal. The tax remains one upon interstate commerce under whatever name it may be designated."

Mr. Archie Billings, of Edinboro, has been appointed Deputy Food Inspector for Erie, Crawford and Mercer Counties. He visited this office on September 20th and repeated the declaration of Food Commissioner Foust that the department intends to give the retailer a square deal, which is all that any merchant expects.

to those who desire to devote their entire time, or carry as side line.

These Chain Grocery Stores Will Yield 200 to 500 Per Cent.

This Is the Modest Promise Made by the Promoters of the United Co-operative Grocery Stores Company of the Chain Grocery Stores They Expect to Establish.

In the New York correspondence of a recent issue of the "Grocery World" appeared the announcement of the incorporation of a new national chain-store concern called the United Co-operative Grocery Stores Co., whose intention seemed to be to establish a chain of retail grocery stores over the entire country.

Immediately following the incorporation the concern advertised for salesmen. Those who replied to the advertisement received the following letter:—

Dear Sir:—We are in receipt of your favor in reply to our advertisement for salesmen in every section of the country to sell the five-dollar shares of the capital stock of the United Co-Operative Grocery Stores Company.

This is designed to be the largest mercantile company on the globe, and we expect its capital stock will be more valuable, dollar for dollar, than the stock of any company now in existence.

Backing this enterprise are some of the most wealthy financiers in the country, so whether we sell any of the company's stock or not, the establishing of the stores will go right on and be vigorously pushed until we have the most extensive chain of stores in the known world.

We want a good salesman in every section of the United States to place a limited amount of the stock of this company, and we will pay a good liberal commission on sales.

Our stores will be conducted strictly on the co-operative principle, and this holding or parent company will retain the controlling interest in all stores established, and desires to make this company as nearly co-operative as possible, by securing investors for its stock in all parts of the country.

We wish particularly to impress upon the minds of those who may undertake the sale of this stock, the great difference between handling the stock of this company and the stock of the ordinary commercial and mining companies.

The percentage received on investments in ordinary commercial companies in which the element of risk is considered small, is usually very moderate, ranging in the most of cases from 6 to 12 per cent. per annum.

In mining companies, it is usually represented that the expected dividends will be enormous; in fact, out of sight, and in nine cases out of ten they remain so.

The elements of risk on investments in this company's stock is entirely eliminated, and it has behind it the positive earning power of from 200 per cent. to 500 per cent. annually on the entire capital stock of the company, so you can sell this stock with the honest conviction and positive assurance that besides earning a large commission, you are conferring a favor upon the investors that will be appreciated more and more as time rolls on.

For selling this company's stock we will allow you a commission of 20 per cent.

This stock is in five-dollar shares, so you get one dollar commission on each share of stock sold.

We pay commission on the shares sold—not on the free shares. The shares are sold at par, or face value, and when you have found a purchaser for any number of shares, from one up, fill out an application blank and send it to us, and we will immediately forward the stock properly executed to you personally, by express, C. O. D., for the amount of the sale, less your commission.

The investor pays to the express agent or to you the full amount of the sale, and you retain the amount of your commission out of it, or the agent retains it for you, sending us four dollars on each share sold, which will be the C. O. D amount.

Whatever number of prospectuses you think you will need, write us, and we will forward them by mail. They are not intended for general distribution, but only to those who are expected to invest or influence investments.

Yours for business,
United Co-operative Grocery
Stores Co.

With this came a second letter, which shows the proposed scope of the scheme:—

Dear Sir:—We herewith enclose our prospectus and other literature that will give you full information respecting the large mercantile company lately formed in New York to establish Co-operative Grocery stores throughout the United States, and will also answer the inquiries relative to the advertisements appearing a few days ago in various newspapers throughout the country inviting an inquiry into the statement that a few dollars would secure an ownership in this company and a substantrial income for life.

It makes every purchaser of goods financially interested in the success of the store in which they trade, and the more goods they buy, the greater will be their financial interest in its success.

By reason of this co-operative system, upon which every store will be conducted, this chain of stores will, without doubt, be the most profitable mercantile enterprise the world has ever seen.

This improved co-operative system that will unfailingly increase the patronage of any particular grocery, united with this line of stores, forms a combination whose earning power is beyond the conception of those engaged in the ordinary commercial or mercantile pursuits.

The management designs to continue the establishment of these stores until every town in the United States of over 3,000 population shall have been provided with one or more.

Therefore it is more than likely that nine-tenths of the investors in the shares of this company's stock will be favored with one of these stores in their own town or vicinity.

Come and join us, and by investing in a few shares of this stock you will receive a substantial income from the largest mercantile company on the globe.

A few shares will give you a large regular income that will continue to increase for all time to come.

Hoping to receive an application from you for a few shares of our stock, we remain,

Sincerely yours,
United Co-operative Grocery
Stores Co.

The value of the concern's calculations of immense profits can be learned from the following extract from the prospectus, in which it is stated that the average sales of a well located grocery store are $3,000 a week:—

The average sales of grocery stores that are well located and of fair size, doing business on the improved co-operative system, such as this company employs, are not expected to be less than $3,000 a week each.

On goods bought in large quantities and sold to a good class of people will yield an average gross profit of 20 per cent., and the operating expenses when doing the above mentioned amount of business, is about 12 per cent. of sales, leaving a net profit of 8 per cent. on all goods sold, making a weekly net profit from each store of $240, a yearly profit of $12,480, or more than 200 per cent. annual net income on the amount invested in the store property.

Good Food Conditions in Indiana.

Of Over Six Hundred Food Samples Examined, Nearly Five Hundred Were Pure. Butter Shows Worst Condition Owing to Heavy Oleo Business. Most Meats Pure.

The "Grocery World" is in receipt of a summary from the Indiana State Board of Health giving in a nutshell the results of examinations by State chemists into the purity of the food products sold within the State. From this report the "Grocery World" takes the following extracts:—

PREPARED MEATS.

But 10 of the 82 samples of meat examined have been adulterated. Sodium Sulfite is still used occasionally in the smaller towns. We believe, however, that the sale of meat-preservatives has been abandoned, and that butchers are no longer solicited to purchase expensive preparations warranted to keep meat without ice, and fresh and bright in color, indefinitely.

BUTTER.

Of 48 butter samples analyzed, 26 were adulterated and 22 pure, equivalent to an adulteration of 54 per cent. The showing is rendered unusually large by reason of the collection of a large number of so-called butters from the Indianapolis restaurants. There is little reason to believe that the butter manufactured by the dairy interests in Indiana is adulterated; but that there is an enormous amount of oleomargerine and renovated butter sold for butter cannot be disputed. Restaurant dealers have for years been selling colored oleomargerine for butter. At the present time this practice is being abandoned, and when oleo is served the customer is advised to that effect by large placards on the walls.

FOODS.

Six hundred and forty-nine samples of foods in all have been analyzed since the last report was made. Four hundred and seventy-three samples were pure and 176 adulterated, showing a percentage of adulteration of 27.10 per cent., an improvement over conditions of last year, although not so satisfactory a showing as the results reported in last report. It is to be understood that this ratio of adulteration does not indicate the true condition of all food products for sale in the State. The large bulk of foodstuffs is not subject to adulteration at all at the present time, and in taking samples for analysis, inspectors are always careful to purchase such articles as are most liable to be impure.

Native Labels on Our Exported Food Products.

Ameriean Consuls are eritieising the absenee of a Siamese and Chinese label on Ameriean goods. The food products sent to those eountries from Ameriea are equally innoeent of any attempt to explain themselves in the language of the eountry. This is a defect whieh manufaeturers would do well to remedy. Canned goods for those markets should bear the name of the maker and the contents in Russian, and as the Chinese eonsume a good share of them a label in their language should also be added. The necessity for a Russian label on meat produets is especially strong just now, first, because there is a vigorous foreign competition, and our French and German rivals have taken eare to put Russian labels on their goods, and, seeond, because there is a eertain prejudice against Ameriean meat products, and a label explaining that the package upon which it appears has been put up under Government supervision and that every ease exported bears a Government eertificate would tend to restore to us that part of the public's confidenee we have so unfortunately lost. As it is, the shopkeeper often finds that he ean make a larger profit on some foreign brand, and so offers it to the customer, who, being unable to read English, eontinues to believe the wild stories in regard to the impurities of our paeking methods which the dealer is too apt to enlarge upon, and aeeepts the brand offered him. Aside from this aspeet of the ease it is a well-known fact that a eustomer, particularly a Chinese, seeing two tins of meat side by side, will prefer that upon whieh he finds a label in his own tongue. There is also a tendeney to imitate American packages in these lines which might be overeome, at least in part, by the use of a Russian label.

Delaware grapes range from 16 to 18 eents per basket. Niagaras are 15 and Coneords 14. The heavy receipts are just about beginning.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XII.—Writing Letters for Customers.

Do you take eare of your customers letter writing?

A good many retailers even neglect writing their own letters, and nothing would be further from their mind than writing letters for their customers, but still that is a good way to inerease the volume of business.

You, who are not too lazy to write, just try the scheme for a while. The next time an inquiry is made for something you do not carry in stock and eannot make a price on, just suggest that you will write and find out all about it for the inquirer by the next time he is in. Then do the writing and watch results. You will find that you have half made that sale when the offer to find out about it is made. When you get the information, and go over it carefully with the inquirer, and know that he thoroughly understands it, you will find that you are better aequainted with him than you ever was before. He will feel the same about you also, and that is the kind of a feeling which gives you the preference whenever he wants anything in your line, especially when he already feels under obligation to you for that letter writing to start with.

Of course, there are exceptions to all rules, but most people are grateful to those who take disagreeable jobs, like letter writing, off their hands; and most salesmen, who are worthy of the title, can make a sale when the customer is right in the store and had a full description and price on goods he has already about decided to buy.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is in steady, healthy and unchanged condition. The sales of the week have been fair, and have included the general line. The week has brought no change in prices in any grade. There seems to be almost a total absence of speculation, all sales being for actual current wants. This puts the market on a basis where traders know what they are doing, and is more satisfactory to everybody.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has remained practically unchanged during the week, showing slight fluctuations, but no particular strength. The undertone is still weak by reason of excessive supply, and the demand perfunctory. Mild grades are unchanged, steady and quiet. Java and Mocha steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change for the week. Raws have been quoted slightly stronger in Europe, the market there being still sensitive to growing crop conditions. Refined sugar is unchanged also, and there will probably be no change unless raws show some radical movement. The demand for refined sugar has fallen off somewhat.

Syrup and Molasses.

Syrup and molasses remain unchanged for the week. Glucose rules at unchanged prices. Compound syrup has taken a small impetus since the advent of cooler weather, and the demand at this writing is very fair. Prices are unchanged. Sugar syrup shows no further change in price for the week, but is still in good demand. Molasses is quiet and unchanged. The new crop season in Louisiana will begin in a few weeks, and all prospects point to a large crop.

Fish.

The only notable feature of the fish market is the extreme scarcity and high price of mackerel. At this writing shore mackerel seem to be the most plentiful grade, but even they are very scarce. Nothing whatever is offered in new Irish fish. Some old are offered at $16 in a large way, this being the price which last week would obtain new fat fish. New fat Norways are now offered, but the supply is very light and the price $6 to $7 per barrel above last year's opening. The present quotation is $19 to $20 for Norway 4s, $23 to $24 for 3s, and $30 for 2s. No 1s are offered. Even at these high prices everything available is eagerly snapped up. Sardines are unchanged, both foreign and domestic. On both the market is firm. Salmon is quiet and steady to firm. Cod, hake and haddock have not yet begun their usual fall demand, but will soon if the cool weather continues.

Canned Goods.

So far as can be learned, the cold and wet weather of the past week has not affected the tomato crop in any material way. There has been no killing frost up to this writing, and the packing is still proceeding. The nominal price for new and old goods alike is still 85 cents, though the West has bought some as high as 87½ cents, and some sales on the other hand are reported as low as 82½ cents. The latter, however, lacks authenticity. It is certain that the tomato situation is still strong and will continue to be unless frost holds off an abnormally long time. Corn, however, was damaged by the weather, though the market has not been affected up to this time. The general feeling on corn seems to be bullish, but the key to the situation is the available stock of old corn, which cannot be safely estimated at this time. Peas are strong for the lower grades and steady for the better. The demand is keen for the former and fair for the latter. Apples are unchanged and firm on spot. No future price has come out up to the present time. There is some slight reaction from the extremely bullish talk of the last few weeks. Some authorities who have looked into the situation pretty carefully in the last few days say that the crop in New York State is larger than most people think. Peaches are unchanged. There has been a fair crop and pack in New York State, and sales have been made during the week on a basis of 25 to 50 cents (gallons) below the opening price on Wisconsin brands. The Baltimore line is unchanged and in light demand. California canned goods are still short and broken; price unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes are very unsettled. Some are offering a little below the market, while some holders are asking more than the market. The market undertone, however, is strong. Old prunes are now obtainable at about 1 cent per pound below the price of new. The demand for prunes is light. Peaches are unchanged, but the trade are uneasy over the position of the fruit in Pennsylvania, and the demand is light. Prices are still maintained. Currants are scarce on spot, and the market is firm on that account. Abroad the market is stronger for crop reasons. No new California raisins are here yet, but some new imported Valencias have arrived and sold readily at 7¾ cents in a large way. Later the price advanced to 8 cents. For later shipment prices are quoted as low as 7 cents. Valencias are going to be an important factor in the raisin market this year. The California raisin situation is unchanged, present prices being about 1 cent above the opening. Apples are firm and in fair demand. Apricots are unchanged and quiet.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show another sharp advance and now rule at $2.15 to $2.20. Unfavorable weather in growing districts is responsible. Marrows have advanced to $2.40 for the same reason. The consumptive demand is good. California limas are higher both on the coast and in secondary markets. Split peas show no change, but the market is firm, and in yellows there is likely to be an advance, probably to $7 per barrel. Green and Scotch peas are scarce and high.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at the recent advance. There is an active demand for all grades for consumption. The make of butter is below normal for the season, and with a good demand the market will continue healthy. At present prices fancy butter can be withdrawn from storage, and while that lasts there will probably be no radical change.

Eggs.

Owing to the scarcity of fresh eggs the market has advanced 1 cent per dozen during the past week. There is a very good consumptive demand, both for fancy fresh eggs and fancy storage. The market is in a very healthy condition, and no special change seems in sight for the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market continues firm. The make of cheese is considerably smaller than usual, and prices are ruling from 10 to 15 cents higher than normal on all grades. The consumptive and speculative demand are very good, and the market is firm at present prices. No change is looked for during the coming week.

Provisions.

The market on everything in the smoked meat line has remained stationary during the past week. Pickled meats have about settled down to the present basis. Stocks are reasonably satisfactory and the demand is seasonable. No change in price is looked for during the next few days. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ¼ cent, while compound lard shows an advance of ⅛ cent. The advance in pure lard is due entirely to increased demand, while the advance in compound is due to the short supply of raw material as well as a better demand. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are firm at unchanged prices and in seasonable demand.

Produce.

White potatoes, 35 cents per basket, demand fair to good; sweets, 45 to 50 cents per basket; culls, 20 to 25 cents per basket, good demand; eggplants, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand fair to good; cabbage, 15 to 25 cents per basket; savoy, $1.25 per barrel; red, $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair; squash, 20 cents per basket, demand fair; cucumbers, 60 cents per basket, demand fair; turnips, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand fair; string beans, yellow, 25 to 30 cents per basket; green, 20 to 25 cents, demand fair; corn, 30 to 40 cents per basket, 75 cents to $1 per 100, demand good; carrots, $2.50 per barrel, demand good; peppers, green, 20 cents; red, 35 cents; cayennes, 40 to 50 cents per basket, demand fair to good; lima beans, flat, 35 cents per basket; improved, 50 to 55 cents; shelled, 10 cents per quart, good demand; yellow onions, 70 cents per bushel, 40 cents per basket; white, 60 cents per basket, $1 per bushel, fair to good demand; pickling onions, yellow, 65 cents per basket; white, 90 cents per basket, demand fair; radishes, $1 per 100, demand fair; tomatoes, 15 to 20 cents per basket, demand good; beets, $1.50 to $2 per 100, demand fair; horseradish, 10 to 15 cents per bunch, demand good; salad, $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, demand good; celery, York State, 25 to 35 cents per bunch, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Apples, 40 to 50 cents per basket; pineapples, $4.50 to $7 per box, demand good; bananas, firsts, $1.25 to $2 per bunch; 8-hands, 75 cents to $1.25; 7-hands, 65 to 85 cents; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents, quality and demand poor; California oranges, $5 to $6 per box, demand good on account of scarcity; lemons, $2.50 to $5 per box, demand fair; limes, 80 cents per 100, demand good.

Nuts.

Almonds, 21 to 22 cents per pound; Brazil, 11½ cents; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; marbot walnuts, 12 cents; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand poor; green peanuts, jumbo, 8 cents; fancy, 7 cents; choice, 5¾ cents; roasted, jumbo, $1.65 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; choice, $1.25, demand fair.

MARKET NOTES.

The peach situation improved somewhat early in the week through larger receipts, but stiffened later when the receipts fell off. At present peaches are coming from Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio, and the range in crates is $2.50 to $3, by the basket $1.25 to $1.75. The wet weather has affected the quality of the fruit, and the demand is only fair.

The crop of pears in this district is fair, but prices are relatively high. Near-by Bartletts average $2.25 per barrel and New Yorks $5 per barrel. Seckel pears average about the same price.

The tomato market is ruling very low, in spite of the heavy rains of the past week, which it was expected would do much damage. Some cracked tomatoes are coming forward, but the general supply is still large, and canners are buying what few they want at 8 to 10 cents. The canners don't want many tomatoes, however, as there are plenty of contract tomatoes in their own districts. A fair jobbing quotation for tomatoes is 20 to 25 cents per basket.

Apples are ruling at a fair price. The crop in Pennsylvania and New Jersey is relatively much better than in New York State. Blush apples range from $3.50 to $4 per barrel, and ordinary grades from $1 to $2 per barrel. The demand is fair.

Watermelons are in good demand and range from 5 to 25 cents each. Melons have had a good season.

Condensed Milk Starts Its Advance.

Practically All Standard Popular-Priced Brands Move Up 25-35 Cents. High Season Ahead on Account of Scarce Fresh Milk.

The expected high winter season for condensed milk has been inaugurated during the week by advances in practically all the standard popular-priced brands. All of the Hires brands advanced and the lower-priced Borden brands, together with Peninsula and several others. The advance ranged from 25 to 35 cents per case, and carries the market far above its usual range.

Something has already been said regarding the firm condensed milk prospects. The supply of fresh milk is very inadequate and the price high. Creameries, condenseries, ice cream men and fresh dealers are competing for it, and this has radically advanced the price. The advance of the past week put popular-priced milk about 50 cent per case above where it should be and even that is probably not the top, as some manufacturers began to talk further advance even before the one made last week was cold.

The outlook is for scarce and high condensed milk during the entire winter.

English Orange Marmalade Not Jelly

In a decision by Judge Byron S. Waite, the New York Board of General Appraisers on Tuesday overruled a protest by Bogle & Scott, of New York, against the assessment of duty on orange marmalade at 1 per cent. per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem, under the provision of paragraph 263 of the tariff act for "comfits, sweetmeats and fruits preserved in sugar." The claim of the importers was that the merchandise was dutiable as a jelly under the same paragraph, thereby aiming to save 1 cent a pound, as jellies are dutiable at 35 per cent ad valorem. The marmalade in question was made from the bitter orange, and included the juice ground skin and pulp of the orange with sugar added to give it the consistency of the well-known commodity of marmalade. In the opinion of Judge Waite, the true jelly intended to be covered by the tariff provision consists merely of the juice of the fruit cooked with sugar to bring it to the proper taste and consistency, and to this description the marmalade in question does not correspond. A similar claim in regard to berry jams is also overruled on the same grounds.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

The advertising manager of a Philadelphia chain-store concern sends in a number of advertisements he has used, with a request that they be taken up and discussed. I reproduce some of them in somewhat reduced size.

* * *

The advertisement headed "Pin Your Faith," etc., measured four inches double column in the original. I have read it over several times—somehow it doesn't sound convincing. It is tame. The money-back offer doesn't go far enough. I don't think it good policy to say you will give back the money if your assertions are not correct." The assertions may be perfectly correct, and yet the tea not suit the customer. Go as far as you can in the money-back idea; otherwise better not go into it at all. I should say "If the tea doesn't suit you, return it and get your money back. We won't even ask you why you didn't like it." That inspires confidence. People realizing there is not the slightest risk, will try a new thing without hesitation.

* * *

I say again that this advertisement does not have a convincing sound. It ought to be more enthusiastic. Let me try:—

We Import This Tea Ourselves.

A delicate, superfine grade of either black, mixed or rich Ceylon. The grades are especially selected for our Blue Ribbon brand, and behind their quality we place our entire reputation. You have probably never tasted such tea. There is a variety for every taste, all relatively of the same superfineness. These teas are sold only in air-tight cartons.

* * *

Here is a coffee advertisement which came with the lot:—

We Roast Our Own Coffee.

We want to know what coffee we're selling, so we buy it green from the best importers and roast it in our own mills. Then we know it is right. But we're not satisfied even with good roasting, for the freshly-roasted coffee goes into air-tight patent bins and stays there with all of its aroma until you get it.

* * *

A good rule to follow in the writting of an advertisement is to say substantially what you would say were the customer standing before you and you were trying to convince her by word of mouth that she should buy the given article.

This is not so bad, for what it purports to be, i. e., a general talk about the care with which the coffees of this firm are bought and roasted. Still, it might be sharpened up, I think. "We Roast Our Own Coffees" would have been better than the empty "We Excel in Coffee." I should hit right out and talk coffee instead of spending three lines in a pointless claim to excellence. For instance, how about this wording?

Well Known Food Expert in Trouble.

Proceedings in bankruptcy were begun on Wednesday against Mrs. Sarah T. Rorer, cookery expert, who two years ago established a restaurant at 42 Broadway, New York. It is alleged that she cannot pay the bills for supplies for the restaurant; that she does not live in New York; that she does not give the enterprise her personal attention, and that it has failed as a result. She owes $2,200 for rent. Creditors who have been supplying Mrs. Rorer with supplies have been under the impression that she is in receipt of an income of $10,000 a year besides anything she might make on the Broadway venture and from royalties on her numerous cook books. She has declared assets of only $5,000 besides the fixtures in the restaurant and the lease of the premises.

Think of it! Five thousand grocers in Pennsylvania alone are selling the Goff remedies; every grocer in the country should be. The firm is making a proposition to those who are not handling their standard remedies that will enable them to make 70 per cent. profit. If you will write to S. B. Goff & Sons Co., Camden, N. J., they will tell you how it is done.

Talk This Over With Your Jobber

Buying future canned goods is always a gamble, with the chances usually against you, unless you get a contract binding your seller to deliver you 100 per cent —all you buy. If you take the ordinary canned goods contract, you can get anything; you never know what till you get it.

You, of course, deal with the jobber and the jobber deals with us. If your jobber will buy Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods (the fanciest of their sort packed in Maryland) he will get 100 per cent. contracts, and he can then give such a contract to you. Wouldn't it pay you to stipulate Blue Bell and Clover Farm brands for this reason, further remembering that no better goods can be packed anywhere?

Think this over hard.

The Installment House Gall.

I had occasion to get around among a lot of the Philadelphia grocers last week and I can't tell you how many times I heard 'em knock the installment houses.

I understand there are about eighteen or twenty of these concerns in Philadelphia who sell stuff on weekly installments. Every one of 'em sells at padded prices; nevertheless they gather in a tremendous lot of victims. People you'd think would never go near the installment places buy swads of goods there.

The installment houses all hurt the regular retail merchant. I believe they hurt the grocer possibly more than the others, because he's easier. I don't mean that they hurt him by making his customers buy less stuff to eat, though in some cases they do even that.

The main trouble they bring the grocer is in making his collections bad. People know they've got to pay the installment collector, because if they don't he'll strip their houses. The grocer can wait, and he usually does wait. He tells me himself that he waits, and he says that the reason he waits is because of the installment houses.

I had quite an interesting little conversation with a Philadelphia grocer I know about this last week. He was kicking about having so much money out—couldn't get it in because a lot of his trade bought of the installment houses and had to have the money ready for the collector every week. Some of his customers had the cheek to tell him so, he said.

"I'll tell you," I said to him, "You could learn a lot from the installment houses if you only knew it."

"That's a funny thing to say," he said, "you just said that most of 'em charged about 50 per cent. more for their goods than they were worth. Want me to learn to do that sort of business?"

"No," I said, severely. "You probably know that already. What I mean is that you could learn to use more gall. Don't be afraid to stand up for your rights."

"Huh!" he said.

"All right," I said, "now look a the difference between you and th installment house. What do yo do when a woman comes in her and wants to open an account You've never seen her before, yo don't know anything about her, bu if she looks respectable she gets th goods. And you may get you money, but it's more by good luc than anything else if you do."

"See here," I went on, "tell me you even once, in all the time you've been in business, asked a woma who came here wanting goods o credit anything about herself? other words, did you even onc make any attempt at all to see if sh was honest?"

"I looked at her," he sai defiantly, "I have to use my ow judgment, don't I? I don't los much."

"But in such a case have you ev asked even one question about h financial reliability?" I persisted.

"I don't know as I have," he re plied.

"Of course you haven't!" I said "You went to sleep and dreamt o the big orders you might get fro her, and you were afraid she migh get mad and walk out if you go inquisitive."

"Now, let's see what the in stallment house does when you go there for goods on credit In the first place they won't se you the goods at all—they simply lease 'em to you until the bill's paid You have to tell a lot of stuff abou yourself, where you work and wha you get, and besides this you hav to give references, so they can loo you up. And they do look you up too. If they find you're all righ you get the goods, but they watch you like a hawk until they're paid for. You're never out of their sight and if you fall down on the pay ments they come to your house and take the goods away."

"You've certainly got it down fine," he said, "you must be a good installment customer."

"Men have died for saying les than that to me," I said sternly "Do you see the difference?" I con tinued (I never notice rudeness) "Where the installment house safe guards itself at every point, you don't safeguard yourself at any point. No wonder you have to wai for your money until the installmen collector's paid. They fix it so he will be paid. That's what you can learn from the installment houses— to use your gall."

"It's not that you haven't got it," said. "I think that in some things ou've got enough gall to sink a hip. You simply use it on me and ther salesmen instead of on your stomer."

"You're right in one thing," said he grocer, "these installment ouses certainly have got the gall ll right. They bother me a lot to et reports on my customers, and ney never yet have inclosed a camp."

"Sure they do," I said, "they'll o anything to protect themselves. They argue that you won't dare to efuse to send in your report, beause when your customer found ut you hadn't done it she'd get nad. And as a matter of fact, you always do do it, don't you?"

"I guess I do," he said.

"And there you are," I said.

Gall is a great thing. How I do wish I had some.

THE STROLLER.

Written for the "Grocery World."

Says Stroller Was Right If His Motive Was Good.

California Reader of the Stroller's Article on the Five Hypocritical Merchants Says Stroller Was Wrong in Judging the Church by Its Renegade Members. Sends Stroller Two Books on Theology to Read on Sundays.

I beg for space to reply to the "Stroller's" article, "The Five Brethren," in the issue of September 2d. I believe the "Stroller" is a good man, a good husband, a good citizen, but a poor theologian. He has earned his way in this world and would like to earn his way to heaven. But "we earn hell, heaven alone can be had for the asking." Although mankind is totally depraved, it has enough natural virtue and sense of honor to keep the commercial world in equipoise. But to think of any of these virtues as coin with which to purchase divine favor is to "put a piece of new cloth into an old garment." "No gods before me; no way but my way" is the keynote of the good book from A to Z.

By their fruits (acts) we are to know or judge men, and the "Stroller" was right (if he did it in the spirit of love) in criticising the five brethren, typical of a large class on the broad way who not only serve Satan, but "steal a livery from heaven to do it with." But he does not seem to grasp the doctrine that we measure acts by their apparent good or evil and that God measures them by their prompting motive, namely, whether done for His glory and with reference to His will or with regard to the opinion of men. The class of men of which the "Stroller" is a type look with contempt and disrespect upon the five brethren. But the Christian man looks upon them with pity and is thankful for grace that keeps him also from being a hypocrite, and makes him see himself as "the sinner," because he breaks the law of the Almighty. Feigned religion says, see what I am, what I do: true religion says, see what God is, what God does. Feigned religion begins in the store, at the prayer meeting or in Africa and gets no further. True religion begins in the heart and home and goes to the store and to Africa.

I have tried to obey that command of the book to be wise before we were harmless and have never given my pocket book to any of the five brethren (unless they were bonded). Neither have I fallen in love with any of those long-praying women who could shout "take my hat, take my shawl, I'm going to heaven bench and all," and then lay abed next morning and let the family eat a cold breakfast.

It is useless to argue, for the natural man, until he is a recipient of grace, can't understand spiritual things. And, like the Scotch fathers, I believe it is part of the punishment of the lost to torment themselves with unanswerable questions, such as why do the wicked live and prosper? And how can a man be an out-and-out hypocrite?

I have derived pleasure and profit from reading the "Stroller's" articles for the past ten years, and I am sending him a couple of books on theology, with the request that he read only extracts from them on Sunday afternoons and Wednesday nights while his Aunt Mary is at Sunday School and prayer meeting. What has this to do with selling groceries? This much: If obedience to God and love to my fellow man prompts my actions, and the Eighth Commandment means to me that I shall help my neighbor get rich as well as get rich myself, I will soon gain the confidence and respect of the public, which means their patronage.

A New Move

And an important one to grocers. There is scarcely a grocer or consumer within twenty-five miles of Philadelphia who does not know of Freihofer's Bread, Pie and Cakes. They have attained their unprecedented popularity solely on merit. We are now manufacturing Macaroni and Noodles. These goods we make like our other goods, of the finest materials money can buy.

The goods are not colored artificially, they get their rich yellow from the entire egg. They not only conform to the Pure Food Laws, but are so much better than the law requires, that you can bank on making and keeping trade with them.

Everybody Knows Them

Knight's Flavoring Extracts have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any first-class brand.

I have read the above, and have gotten the two books. Thanks, Mr. Witherspoon. You say I'm a "poor theologian." I wonder what in thunder that means. If I ever find out what it means, and it's bad, Witherspoon, I'm going to stick a pin in you. Just think of me getting books sent me on theology! Ain't I the hard case, though? But I'm going to try and read those books, all right. I may become respectable yet.—THE STROLLER.

A Cake Cabinet.

One of the nicest features that has recently been placed on the market is the Durham Display Cake Cabinet. It was made to serve the purpose of keeping the cans of cakes and crackers off the floor, to prevent the loss by breakage and sampling, to keep the moisture and dust out, and also to serve as an advertisement for the cakes. It works out very satisfactorily, and is so arranged as to make it desirable for every grocer and general storekeeper to instal one. It is made by The Durham Display Fixture Co., Richmond, Va.

The economy of extravagance of a purchase does not depend so much on what you pay as on what you get. When you purchase Snider's Catsup you get good value for your money. It's well worth the price it commands.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

Here is one reason why Stickney's Mustard is preferred by dealers and consumers who like the best.

We do the entire work of mustard making in our own plant, and have done it for almost a century.

Mustard, which from the seed to the tin is under the maker's supervision, is almost sure to be better, and particularly to be more regular in its superiority than mustard produced as most mustard is—by concerns who buy it ground and only pack it themselves.

There is no better mustard made or possible to be made, than "S. & P's."

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

House Cleaning.

House cleaning season is approaching and a display of articles used in that operation would be in place at present. Place in your window one dozen buckets, one box of soap, one box of soap powder, three dozen of ammonia, two dozen scrub brushes, one dozen insect destroyer, two dozen brooms, and other goods used in house cleaning neatly arranged in window.

Now, these are goods the women will need, and to attract you must interest the little maids who run the errands.

To do this you will see that window contains $25 or $30 worth of goods. Now, you can easily afford to spend two or three dollars for this ad., as your little friends will circulate the news. If after getting goods arranged you will place in said window a large doll and in front of said doll you will have a sign stating:—

> Every customer buying articles out of this display will be given a sale slip and same will be recorded, and when goods are all sold the one having the largest amount of purchases will receive the doll.

"Now, listen" (that is the way my little three-year-old always rivets my attention, so I hear it so much it was down before I thought). Do not fill window with some old soap that is not salable or any such goods. Remember this is a display to get the little errand runners interested in your store, and when they come in notice them and give them the glad hand and they will not forget it.

A neat sign hanging above, worded something like this, would not be out of place:—

> After a hard day's work you will find a soothing and stimulating effect in a cup of our—tea.

"As Good As I Bought Last Time"

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Millers Say They Can't Help High Rolled Oats.

Quote Present Excessive Price of Raw Oats to Show That Rolled Oats Quotation Leaves Only Small Profits. New Oats About to Come Forward.

The millers of rolled oats defend the present exceedingly high price of $7.10 per barrel in bulk by the fact that the present high value of raw oats just about lets the miller out whole.

At the present writing raw oats are quoted at 56 cents per bushel. This is about 20 cents above a fair average price. Where oats are of average weight it requires 10½ bushels to make a barrel of the rolled product. That aggregates $5.88. The barrel costs 35 cents and the milling and other incidental expenses eat up the most of the balance. Another factor which this year enters into the case, according to the packer, is that the new oats are running light. That means 13 bushels to the barrel and a corresponding increase in the cost.

No new rolled oats have come forward as yet, except a few in packages. New bulk oats will begin to arrive almost immediately and will ease the situation, so far as supply is concerned, though the holders deny that there will be any material decline in prices.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Robert Smith and Francis Smith were found guilty in the United States District Court on Tuesday of operating an illicit establishment for the manufacture of oleomargarine on Willard street. Judge McPherson sentenced both men to pay a fine of $1,000 each for manufacturing the stuff and imposed an extra fine of $200 on the former for retailing it.

A petition was filed in the United States District Court during the week against the Wabash Milling Co., of Tamaqua, Pa., asking that the concern be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The petitioners and their claims are: George Eckert, $2,960.36; Hoppe Bros., $1,087.10; Mauser Oil Co., $825.

How to Get a Roll Top Desk Free.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, have made an arrangement with the Manufacturers' Trade Mark Association, the big premium clearing-house of New York, which enables them to substantially reward retailers who show an interest in increasing the sale of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas.

These goods are so fine that it is hard to sell anything else to consumers once they have had them; so besides the reward the Knickerbocker Chocolate Co. give grocers for pushing them, they are certain to please their trade.

Suppose, for example, a grocer needs a new roll-top desk, a safe, a cheese cutter, a computing or platform scale; instead of drawing on his bank account to pay for them he pushes the sale of the Knickerbocker Co.'s goods with his customers, saves the Universal Coupons packed in every case for him and adds them to those coming to him from other manufacturers, and in a short time he will have collected enough to entitle him to any of the articles named.

The Manufacturers' Trade Mark Association issue a handsome illustrated catalogue which they send free to grocers, showing an almost unlimited array of useful articles of merchandise which they will send grocers in exchange for the Universal Coupons, together with a list of all the manufacturers throughout the country who give these same coupons to the grocers.

The Knickerbocker Co. is the only manufacturer of chocolate and cocoa from whom a grocer can get these Universal coupons; so grocers who want valuable free merchandise as well as their regular profits will concentrate their efforts on the sale of the Knickerbocker Chocolate Co.'s goods.

Says Coffee Loss Was Overstated.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 24, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In your "Special Correspondence" from Washington, under date of September 20th, a very able article is spoiled by the misinformation contained in the summing up of the valorization scheme of the Brazilian Government. Your correspondent says that at the rate the first 2,596,566 bags cost the Government, the entire 7,800,000 bags which have been bought would have cost them close to $90,000,000. He then assumes that the Government have about 7,800,000 bags (which is probably correct) at the present time and that their value at 6.37 per pound (the average market price for No. 7 in New York during the week ending July 24th) is $65,585,520, showing an apparent loss of about $24,000,000 for the Government by reason of its purchases.

While in no sense friendly to the valorization scheme, the writer does not believe in using false figures to bolster up an argument against it, and these are absolutely false in the fact that the 7,800,000 bags are not No. 7 coffee. The Government's policy has been to buy the better grades and thereby create a scarcity of such coffees, and this they have successfully done. As a matter of fact, the average grade of their holdings would increase their value over the figures given at least $16,000,000. There is no question that so far their holdings would show a loss if they were compelled to market them; but not such a loss as your correspondent would lead your readers to suppose.

Yours truly,
CHARLES W. ERVIN.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 27, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is quite active, spices generally being in good demand. Seeds for pickling are now much sought for.

Pepper.—Prices are practically unchanged; demand very good. Spot stocks are light.

Cayennes are in very good demand. Bright Chillies are scarce; prices steady, but unchanged.

Cloves.—Spot and near-by parcels are being taken up quickly. Cable prices have advanced.

Pimento (Allspice) is very firm and in good demand. Far off shipments are offered at full prices. There is no question about crop being seriously short.

Nutmegs are unchanged and unusually low.

Mace.—Prime stock is very scarce. Prices are firm and the tendency appears upward.

Gingers are very active and steady. Spot stocks are now very low, and there will be no new arrivals until early in 1908.

Green Ginger Root.—Exceedingly scarce and practically unobtainable. The market, therefore, has greatly advanced.

Seeds.—Celery and Caraway are steady, with practically unchanged prices. Coriander seed is unchanged, 2½ cents being market value to-day for round lots.

point of the season, but recovered partly afterward. So far there has been only a slight weakening, and now the market shows symptoms of a firmer feeling because of renewed buying by Western jobbers and Western canners. The news about the Western crop is not encouraging, and some Western canners have already given notice of short delivery against their contracts, while throughout this section the whole situation hangs upon the weather conditions during the remainder of this month. It looks like there is an active market ahead for tomatoes, and purchases made now will probably prove to be in buyer's favor.

In spite of the advanced prices, the demand for nearly every staple article in the line of canned vegetables and fruits, as well as cove oysters, continues active. Gallon apples advanced from $3 to $3.20 and the buying continued at that price. No. 3 standard apples, peaches, blackberries, string beans, sweet potatoes, seconds peas, corn and berries of all kinds advanced, and still show an upward tendency because of light stocks. When the canning season ends and packers have filled all their contracts the stocks of goods left for sale will be probably the lightest on hand at any time during the last ten years or more. The packing of new pears has commenced in a small way.

Tomatoes.—The canning season in this section is not over yet, and one never can tell what tomatoes are going to do, but the market at this writing shows increased activity.

Yours truly,

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 26, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is active on tomatoes. We are having some good buying. Packers are getting quite a good deal of raw stock, but are being very much hampered by the scarcity of labor. Owing to this trouble, a great deal of stuff is going to waste. The situation is in very peculiar shape. In spite of the good packing which has been going on for several weeks, there is comparatively only a limited number of packers who seem to want business. Of course, the explanation of this is that a great many futures have been sold, and while some packers are gradually working off their orders there are others who are still behind. None of them are willing to take any business until they have all their orders filled. This has made a strong market so far this season and has resulted in the supply being a little below the demand at times.

We are having a pretty fair demand for peaches—that is, for small lots. It is impossible to buy any large lots of peaches here.

Apples.—The demand is sufficiently good to keep the market pretty bare all the time. Consequently there still seems to be somewhat of a tendency toward higher prices. This is especially true of No. 10s. It is almost impossible to get a price on this size at present.

String Beans.—The market closes stronger. There are not many beans being offered. Quite a number of packers are out of the market, owing to the fact that they are a little behind on their orders.

We are having a fair demand for corn, especially standard Maine style. The market on these goods is in very strong shape.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & Co.

Our Flour is Losing Ground in Brazil.

In spite of the 20 per cent. tariff preferential in favor of American flour in Brazil the flour trade of the United States in Brazil for the first part of the current year failed to show the expected increase. The figures for the first three months of the year, during which the preferential in favor of American flour was in full effect, shows an increase in the imports of American flour over the imports of last year, but the increase is not as great proportionately as that in the imports from all countries. Taking the entire period the imports of flour from the United States have decreased about 38 per cent., while the general flour imports have increased about 93 per cent.

Making Ceylon Tea Popular.

About two years ago Mr. Walter Allan Courtney, the Ceylon Tea Commissioner, determined to break away from the subsidy plan of advertising which had been in vogue by his predecessor. He determined to interest the dealers as well as the consumers, and with this idea in mind he sought for a practical man, well versed in the conduct of business in this country, to act as his assistant. Mr. Courtneys choice fell upon Mr. T. P. Welsh, the popular vice-president of the Beaver National Bank of New York City, who is well-known and liked by the trade.

They started after the wholesale dealers, getting them to put up an attractive package tea of their own, supplied by Messrs. Courtney & Welsh, who had engaged Mr. L. Beling, the well-known expert tea tester, to produce a tea of superior quality at a reasonable price.

The wide scope of the campaign is best shown by what was done for John Scott & Co., wholesale grocers of Philadelphia. This firm was induced to put out a Ceylon tea of their own under the name "State House Ceylon Tea." The name being a particularly happy selection because of the loyalty of Pennsylvanians and Philadelphians generally to "Independence Hall."

The blend of tea obtained for Messrs. Scott & Co. is so superior that it is impossible to duplicate it either in quality or price in the Philadelphia market.

That the greatest publicity should be obtained for "State House" Ceylon Tea, Messrs. Courtney & Welsh arranged a unique demonstration in John Wanamaker's store. They obtained about 1,200 square feet of space on the main floor in a choice part and established a Ceylon Tea Totam, or garden. The garden was surrounded by a wall representing that seen at the famous Temple of the Tooth at Kandy, Ceylon. In the garden was a bungalow, with thatched roof, after the Singhalese architecture. The entire decorations were Ceylon India. The tea tables and stools were specially designed to be in harmony with the color scheme. The demonstrators were costumed as nearly as possible like Tamil maidens, and the tea was served by East Indians in Tamil costumes. The tea was made in the new tilting "Ceylon" teapots. This teapot has to be turned on its back with the spout in the air while the tea is brewing, and as soon as the pot is turned right side up the tea leaves are automatically drawn up out of the infusion, thus making a good cup of tea a certainty. They furnished a powerful object lesson in the simple principle of making good tea—the withdrawal of the spent leaves from the liquor.

At the time of the demonstration some attractive advertisements were run in the daily newspapers calling attention to the exhibit.

The value of the campaign is best shown by the fact that through it more than 600 dealers who had never handled a pure Ceylon tea were induced to stock "State House" Ceylon Tea, the greater portion of which had been sold to people requesting where the tea could be obtained. While no tea was sold at the Totam, the result was obtained by having visitors sign postal card orders on their regular grocers.

Pennsylvania News Items.

A paper sent by Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Agricultural Department, on "How flours and other milling products may be adulterated within the meaning of the food law," was read at the State Convention of Millers in Lancaster on Thursday last. He urged millers not to label flour with a brand that is not in the sack or barrel. He advised millers not to use chemicals to bleach flour. The claim has been made that nitrogen is harmless, but the use of nitric acid is dangerous. There is a mistaken opinion that the value of flour is measured solely by color, when the fact is that color is an accident and not a quality. Extreme whiteness is frequently obtained at the sacrifice of some of the useful ingredients of the wheat kernel. From a health standpoint, it would be a good idea to do away entirely with the bleaching process. The convention decided to urge the repeal of the mercantile tax law.

What's in a Name?

We'll tell you. We have picked out the name Apelpi for our Evaporated Apples, so that every time it is thought of particular people will think of the finest fruit of this kind ever put on the market.

We have adopted the sentence, "The bottom as good as the top," because that is unusual with evaporated apples, and we pride ourselves on the fact that it applies to ours. Put them in, and your troubles in this direction are over.

"Is This What I Made?"

If the cook who invented Baked Beans with tomato sauce were to come back and open up some of the cans labeled Baked Beans he would go gladly back to oblivion.

For "Baked Beans" doesn't always mean baked beans any more. In most cases it means beans boiled or steamed, dampened with a little cheap catsup and packed. The result is an attempted fraud on the palate of him who knows the real thing.

L. & S. Baked Beans are really baked in the good new way. We guarantee that absolutely. Baking makes the bean over. Instead of swelling and mushing it up like steaming or boiling, it leaves it just as firm but mealy and melting.

And our tomato sauce is tomato sauce made by an expert.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

It Is Spelled R=A=M=L=Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R–A–M–L–Y.

In every leading magazine published you can find the advertisements of Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour, preaching the gospel of pure and nutritious food.

And incidentally building up the already enormous business in these products—building it up by bringing orders to retail grocers the country over.

If you believe in selling products of unimpeachable purity and wholesomeness, and particularly if you believe in filling orders which we are inspiring for you every day, why not stock up Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour.

RALSTON PURINA MILLS

PORTLAND, ORE. ST. LOUIS, MO. TILSONBURG, ONT.

Samples supplied for your trade upon written request to the Mills.

The Old Brands Lag Behind

The leading soap powder to-day is unquestionably Snow Boy. Don't take our word for this—ask anybody who keeps posted on conditions.

Time was when other brands beat Snow Boy, but that time is past. Snow Boy Washing Powder is now ahead because it never hurts anybody's hands, and always does its work. It's a perfect cleanser, and never disappoints. Other soap powders will clean well enough, but they also clean off the skin from the user's hands.

The premiums help, too.

Does Light Attract YOU?

We believe you'll say yes—as a matter of fact it attracts us all. If you could induce almost everybody who passed your store to stop and look in your window, and you had something there which made them remember your store, would you increase your trade? We think you'll say yes again. You can put a display of goods in your window which you can afford to sell close and light it with electric devices in such a way that every passer-by will stop to look. You can so impress them that they will come in the next day to buy. You know what to do with them when they come in. Sell them enough to pay the cost of your lighting for a month.

We will show you how it can be done if you will go to the phone and call us up. Don't wait a day. Start to increase your trade NOW.

A Case With Only One Explanation

No matter how many new soaps you thought it necessary to put in, Mr. Retailer, you've noticed that they made no difference in the sale of Babbitt's Best.

There never were so many soaps as there are to-day, and never so much energy spent in selling them, yet Babbitt's Best has to-day the largest sale of its long career!

Can the cause of this be anything else than what we say it is—the fact that Babbitt's Best is the best, the most staple, and the most wanted laundry soap made?

You May Think You Can't Afford an Automobile in Your Business, but, as a Matter of Fact, You Can't Afford NOT To Have One

A Rapid Motor Truck or Delivery Wagon will do more work than two teams at half the cost. If you can deliver twice as many goods at half your present expense with one of our machines, are you not making a mistake to stick to horses and wagons. Do you know that the trolleys don't cost as much to run as the horse cars? We are certain you know they do much better work.

Get our catalogue and we will show you the Twentieth Century method of delivering goods.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

Attract Good Trade

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

18 to 24 S. Seventh St.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

Pennsylvania Food Commissioner Will Not Generally Prosecute Dried Fruits

After a Conference With Wholesale Trade He Agrees to Bring Two Test Cases and Wait for Decisions Therein. Conference Reveals Chance for Trouble. Commissioner Says Important Protective Part of Law Is Unconstitutional. Results of the Fight.

Several representatives of the wholesale grocery trade of Pennsylvania held a conference last Saturday afternoon with Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, apropos of Rule 11, just issued by the department, to the effect that dried fruits bleached with sulphur would be prosecuted. The conference was held at Harrisburg, and according to those present Mr. Foust's evident intention was or had been to arrest every dealer he could find selling sulphured dried fruits, which means every dealer who sells dried fruits at all. At the instance of Deputy Attorney-General Cunningham, who was called into the conference, the Commissioner was persuaded from adopting that course, and also from bringing five cases which he already had under way. He will now bring two cases which will serve to test the application and constitutionality of the act.

During the conference the Commissioner made a statement of intention which presages trouble for the trade. He stated that he had been advised that that portion of the new Pennsylvania State food law which forbade him from prosecuting goods which complied with the Federal food law and regulations was unconstitutional, and that he therefore proposed to bring prosecutions under the old drastic food law of 1895. This is a very startling attitude and will not deepen the trade's impression that Mr. Foust intends to give them a square deal.

According to jobbers who were present at the conference, the Food Commissioner was not inclined to concede the trade much in the matter of his dried fruit ruling. The first demand made by the trade was that the order should be rescinded entirely and all attempt to interfere with sulphured dried fruits be abandoned. This on the ground that Federal Food Inspection Decision No. 76 together with the Food Board's written statement that no prosecution would be brought even against heavily sulphured goods, permitted such goods to be sold, and under the State act the Commissioner could not prosecute them for that reason. Mr. Foust's answer to that was that that part of the State law forbidding prosecution if in conformity with the Federal law was unconstitutional, and he therefore proposed to prosecute in spite of the provision.

The committee of jobbers made very little headway until Deputy Attorney-General Cunningham was called in. From the beginning he sided with the jobbers, and the Commissioner was induced to recede from one position after another. His attitude was that he proposed to "execute the law," and that executing the law meant immediate action against everybody violating it. He was advised by Mr. Cunningham that the suggested plan of making one or two test cases was infinitely fairer than general prosecution, particularly in view of the enormity of the industry, and the large number of men engaged in it. The Commissioner then said he had five cases ready to bring and he proposed to bring those anyway. He was again admonished by Mr. Cunningham that five would serve the purpose no better than two. Finally the Commissioner decided to bring only the two cases and to institute no more until those two are decided If this means decided by the Supreme Court, the trade are free for six or nine months at least. If it means simply decided by the lower county court the concession may mean but a brief respite, as the courts of the interior counties put through their criminal business very speedily.

The two test cases will be brought in Blair and Clearfield Counties. The Commissioner selects Blair probably because he lives there. This case was commenced almost immediately after the conference, Charles Kephardt, of Altoona, being the defendant. The charge was the sale of dried peaches containing sulphurous acid. The Commissioner agreed to base his cases not on the simple presence of sulphur in the fruits, but upon the presence of an excess of 35-1,000 of 1 per cent.

Both of these actions will be fought hard by the associated wholesale grocers of the State. The chance is that the retail interests will take little if any part. Leading attorneys will be engaged, probably those who framed the sections of the act which the Commissioner declares are unconstitutional.

One suggestion made by the Deputy Attorney-General at the close of the conference will probably be followed by the jobbers at once. It was that a hurry-up notice be sent to the trade to get the current supply of sulphured fruits into consumptive channels as soon as possible, in order to avoid trouble under a possible adverse decision.

Both the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware and the Grocers' and Importers' Exchange will be active in the fight to preserve the dried fruit industry. The various members of the latter organization who are interested in the dried fruit business held a meeting at the Exchange at 11.45 last Wednesday. Much discussion was had, but nothing definite done.

The Wholesale Grocers' Association has issued notice to its members, recommending them to guarantee all retailers buying dried fruits against State prosecution. This is really quite as effective by way of actual protection to the retailer as a simple guarantee of conformity with the law.

One point which will be insisted upon in the defense of the two test cases above referred to is that in order to decide how much sulphur is present in dried fruit, analysis should be made not upon a sample as sold, but upon a sample which has been soaked and cooked, as both of the latter processes eliminate much of the sulphur.

Cheese at Almost Unprecedented Price.

Market 3 to 4 Cents Above Normal. Higher Prices Expected Later. Scarcity of Milk, Induced by High Feed, the Cause.

Cheese has during the week followed the advancing market in other dairy products, and at the present writing rules at a price higher than for many years. At the present writing the market for New York State full cream cheese ranges from 15 to 15⅜ cents in a large way. A normal price at this season is 11 to 12 cents. Pennsylvania cheese, which usually rules about ¼ cent below the New York State market, is now practically worth the same.

As has been several times explained, the cause of these extremely high prices of cheese is the scarcity of milk and the competitive demand for it from other manufacturing sources. There are prophecies that the market will eventually go to 17 to 18 cents during the present season, but there seems to be no reason to expect these prices in the near future. The make of cheese is small.

To give one idea of the reason why milk is so scarce, the present prices of feed, as compared with the prices prevailing January 1, 1907, are illuminating. A certain standard grade of feed which ruled on the first of the year at $22.60 per ton to-day commands $34.60. Another has advanced in the same time from $20.10 to $32.10. This makes the keeping of cows very expensive and has unquestionably caused many farmers to sell cattle instead of keeping them.

The high prices of cheese have considerably reduced the consumption, which is a good thing, for if the demand was normal the price would be much higher.

TRADEMARK REGISTRATION

A. G. Crockett manager of the firm of Duncan & King, collecting agents, with offices in the Park Building, and James Trout, general attorney for the same concern, Allegheny, Pa., were arrested last week on charges of conspiracy to defraud on information made by J. A. Swinehart, of the Swinehart Clinker Tire Co., of Akron, Ohio. It is alleged that the informant made a contract with George Jacoby, who was formerly an agent for the Duncan & King firm, for the sum of $100 to collect debts for the Akron concern. Mr. Swinehart alleges that his firm has sent bills here for collection and has never received any service from the collecting agency. He alleges that he was defrauded out of $100. Information was also made against Jacoby, but the detectives say Jacoby is no longer with the firm and is not living in Allegheny.

The associations in Allegheny County will make monthly exchange of credit lists.

Through the able efforts of H. B. Davenport, secretary, the Business Men's Association of Plymouth has been revived.

The Huntingdon Business Men's Association has increased its membership, and has now over 60 members upon its roster. Secretary D. M. Stewart is a hustler.

Newspaper clippings have reached this office indicating that two different towns in Pennsylvania have passed local ordinances requiring any soap club to take out a license before they can engage in peddling. Chester, Pa., is one of these cities, but William H. Nelson, president of the Chester Association, informs us that their Councils have not considered any ordinance of this character. If any of the merchants of Pennsylvania know of any city or borough that has passed such an ordinance they will oblige the State Secretary with a copy of the ordinance and a statement of how it works in practice.

Ira F. Smith has resigned as secretary of the Williamsport Merchants' Association, and Don M. Larrabee has been elected to fill the position.

Secretary Jos. C. Kane, of Allegheny, writes: "What do you do with members of your association that do not pay their dues? I had two members that their dues ran up to the amount of $3. I tried several times to persuade them to pay, wrote letter after letter, telephoned to them time after time, and they always had some excuse or was out or something, and finally one of the members when I called at his store to collect his dues, amounting to $3, deliberately walked out of the door after asking him for his money and got in his wagon and drove away. I thought that he was a very undesirable member for our association. He would not come to the meetings and would not take any interest in letters and other information mailed to him, so I sued him for his dues, and the other member, each owing $3 apiece, and it cost them $1.98 to pay their dues to the secretary of this association. After receiving their money from the squire I notified them that if they were not satisfied with our manner of doing business that we would very gladly accept their resignation and take their names from the roll of membership in this association, but unless they do send their resignation in writing they would be subject to 50 cents a month dues, which I would proceed to collect the same way if they failed to pay in advance in compliance to the Constitution and By-Laws of this association. This movement of mine seemed to stir up excitement among the members and they realize now that this office is run on business principles for business men only, and I think that from the results that I have obtained by suing these two members for their dues that it was a pretty good stunt and I propose to carry it out."

President of the National Wholesalers' Association Writes Secretary Green That His Organization Will Aid Retailers in Their Fight. Iowa Food Law Squelches Box Car Peddlers.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 3, 1907.

The following copy of a letter recently received is of more than passing interest:—

My Dear Mr. Green:—Your very kind letter of the 20th inst. duly received, also copy of your letter to the President of the United States.

This parcels post matter is something in which we are all deeply interested, and I am pleased that you are doing all in your power to prevent such a law as you mention being enacted by the next Congress. I believe that it can be fairly shown that a universal flat postage rate for delivery of merchandise would be detrimental to the interests of the consumer, whether he lives in the country or in the city. If he lives in the city, it is fair to presume that he has a home of his own. Nearly all of our working people own their own homes; therefore their interests are far and away from being along the line of the excessive growth of large cities somewhere at some distance. The growth of his home town is much more to his interest. If he lives in the country and cultivates the land, there is nothing so valuable to him as a home market for his farm products. The parcels post would divert much trade from the village store or the medium-sized town or city store to the large trade centres like Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, etc. In the largest cities, big catalogue houses have grown up under the present laws, and a parcels post law would be greatly to their advantage. I do not believe that these large stores are helpful to the general consumer. If the housekeeper buys from the catalogue and makes up her mind from a picture, I do not think she will be as satisfactorily served as if she were to go to the country store and make a comparison of the quality and price on the spot. I believe an occasional visit to her home merchant would be much more educational and valuable than the perusal of a printed catalogue at home.

The President of the United States and the members of his cabinet, I am sure, wish to be practical in these merchandising matters. They are naturally interested in taking care of the consumer. The multitude of modest homes in our beloved country need their careful and thoughtful protection. I sometimes fear, however, that they are not altogether practical, nor do they give careful examination to real, actual conditions.

I shall be pleased to assist you in any way I can, because I think you are right. I am just as much in love with my countrymen as any one. I want them served well, not badly. They do not need a parcels post law, which will eliminate natural conditions of distance; they need to be educated up to a high degree of loyalty that is due to their locality. A farm is worth much more if it is in a well-supported local market than it possibly can be if it depends upon a market in a far distant city, and that is true of a house and lot in any of our medium-sized towns and cities.

With kind regards, I am, yours very truly,

WILLIAM JUDSON,
President National Association of Wholesale Grocers.

Mr. Ira B. Thomas, secretary of the Iowa State Retail Grocers' Association, writes that through the efforts of the State Association, assisted by the Food Commissioner, a second arrest of representatives of box car grocery peddlers was made in Waterloo a few days ago. Two of the agents were fined $25 each and, refusing to pay fines, were placed in jail. After remaining in jail over night they paid their fines.

It is the purpose of the Iowa State organization to continue its efforts in the prosecution of those peddlers by having a Deputy Food Commissioner on hand wheney they learn that they are to make delivery of a car of goods. Sam les of the goods were secured the food department and it wa found they did not comply with th provisions of the Iowa law, hen arrests were made and prosecutio will follow.

ntents of the package had to be rrected.

The official notice is as follows:

When the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs act were issued by the three Secretaries on October 16, 1906, one of the regulations (17-I) provided that any labels printed and on hand on that day which did not contain a misstatement as to the character of contents but which were not in strict compliance with other requirements of the regulations, might be used without fear of prosecution until October 1, 1907.

Recently the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and individual wholesalers and jobbers throughout the United States, requested the Board of Food and Drug Inspection to recommend to the three secretaries the extension of the privilege until October 1, 1908.

After a careful consideration of the matter the Board has unanimously decided to refuse to recommend such an extension. It is the opinion of the members of the Board that sufficient time has elapsed for manufacturers, jobbers and wholesalers to adjust their business affairs to the terms of the law and of the regulations.

It is apparent, from the letters received by the Board, that the general impression exists that the use of corrected labels will not be permitted after October 1, 1907. This is an erroneous impression, and is evidently gathered from the wording of regulation 17 (I) and more particularly from food inspection decision 43, which stated that on and after October 1, 1907, the labels must be originally properly printed. This statement was advisory and conveyed a warning that further extension of the privilege need not be asked. It is desirable, of course, both from the standpoint of the government officials who have charge of the enforcement of the law, and from the viewpoint of the manufacturers, that the labels should be correct as originally printed.

Any person has a right to use a label which is not false or deceptive in any particular, even though this result is arrived at through the use of stickers, erasures or other suitable means. Attention, however, is directed to the fact that misleading and deceptive statements must be obliterated. In other words, it is not sufficient, in the opinion of the Board that a deceptive statement should be allowed to remain on one portion of the label with a corrective statement upon another portion of the label.

Sulphured Nuts Legal If Not Excessively So.

Chairman John C. Mahlan, of the Pure Food Committee of the New York Dried Fruit Association, has received a letter from the Board of Food and Drug inspection, in which the board, replying to the committee's inquiry regarding sulphur in imported nuts, reiterates its former decision that nuts bleached or preserved with sulphur fumes will be admitted so long as the kernels of the nuts do not contain more than the specified limit of sulphur dioxide, 350 milligrams to a kilogram of fruit. Tests have been made of old nuts now in stock and not only has the amount of sulphur been found less than the specified amount, but it has been found to be only a mere trace of the acid. Nevertheless the trade will generally unite in a policy of cautioning the foreign shippers and thus endeavor to have the new goods entirely within the pale of the law.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XIII.—Don't Dodge New Ideas.

Some people, including merchants, always ridicule everything they see or hear that is new to them.

Do not for a single moment allow yourself to be influenced by such ridicule, for it is merely the way some people have of showing their superior knowledge, and they generally wind up by showing that they have no knowledge.

Just bear in mind that there is not a single great invention now in existence which has not been mercilessly ridiculed by hundreds and thousands of people, and still the success was just as sure as though nothing had been said which was detrimental.

Do not dodge the new ideas, no matter what your associates may say of them, for it is the new idea of to-day which is the necessity of to-morrow, and those who take the trouble to cultivate the new ideas, and get all possible information, are in a position to make the most out of them.

New ideas are being hatched every second, and you do not need to wait for something brilliant to come from your own brain. The good idea of any other man, if well applied to your business, will do it just as much good as though your own brain did the work.

The man who feels that no ideas are worth trying on his business unless they originate with him is not usually a success. It is the man who can quickly grasp the idea of another and at once change it so it will apply to his own business who usually gets the most benefit from it, and gives his business the reputation of being up to date.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

Mr. Foust and the Dried Fruit Situation.

The "Grocery World" fears that Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust has relaxed his original expresssed intention to bring food prosecutions only when absolutely necessary for the consumer's protection. He has gone far out of his way to disturb the dried fruit situation, perfectly knowing three things: First, that there was absolutely no public demand or demand from any quarter against the sale of sulphured fruit; second, that no case is on record of harm from sulphured fruits; third, that the Federal Food Department had given the trade specific authority for the sale of just such goods as the Pennsylvania Commissioner has proceeded against. What good reason can Mr. Foust have, in view of these things, for waging his campaign? He could have either of two reasons: 1, an exalted and conscientious idea of his own duty in the premises, unaffected by the action of anybody else; or, 2, a sourness because his predecessor had collected a thousand dollars in fines where he had collected five, accompanied by a desire to cultivate a rich and untrodden field on his own behalf.

Food Regulations.

The United States Board of Food and Drug Inspection has refused to extend the time for the use of old labels beyond October 1st, and the "Grocery World" is in hope that this will precipitate some declaration of decent independence on the part of somebody in the trade against the unwarranted efforts of the Federal Government to interfere with matters that don't concern it.

The Board's refusal to extend the labeling date means that Regulation 17, Clause b, is now in force, provided that it has a right to be in force. The regulation referred to is as follows:—

> (b) The principal label shall consist, first, of all words which the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, specifically requires, to wit, the name of the substance or product; the name of place of manufacture in the case of food compounds or mixtures; words which show that the articles are compounds, mixtures, or blends; the words "compound," "mixture," or "blend;" or words designating the substances or their derivatives and proportions required to be named in the case of drugs and foods. All these required words shall appear upon the principal label with no intervening description or explanatory reading matter. Second, if the name of the manufacturer and place of manufacture are given, they shall also appear upon the principal label. Third, elsewhere upon the principal label other matter may appear in the discretion of the manufacturer.

In the case of pure goods or any goods whose labels do not misrepresent their character, the Federal Board has no more right to interfere than it would have to say that all jelly manufacturers must wear pink ties. And even in the case of labels that do misrepresent, if the misrepresentation is adequately corrected wth a sticker, or in any other sufficient way, the label is legal, and the Board is powerless to meddle with it in any way, shape or form. There is nothing in the law to warrant it in doing so, and nothing in the law to permit it to prosecute anybody who ignores its foolish orders.

All this will be proven just as soon as somebody has the moral courage to resist.

Larkin Logic.

The "Grocery World" has always contended that the Larkin Soap Co., when they claimed to "give away" their premiums, were guilty of gross misrepresentation, and that the consumer not only paid for his premiums, but paid a good round price. Listen to the Larkin Co's own presentation of its case in the October "Ladies' Home Journal":

> THIS $10 SEWING DESK YOURS WITHOUT COST.
>
> How the Larkin idea means money. In buying of a retailer you must pay for his and other middlemen's profits, losses and expenses. Larkin direct factory-to-family dealing is practical, co-operative and give you double retail value.
> Every few weeks any small household can use $10 worth of Larkin laundry and toilet soaps, toilet articles, coffees, teas, spices, extracts, baking powder, any selection from over 150 home needs of superior excellence. You get in addition, without cost, the saved middleman's expenses in a premium that alone sells for $10 at retail. All for $10. Every Larkin offer saves you 100 per cent.

Now, listen to the logic here: "In buying of a retailer you must pay for his and other middlemen's profits, losses and expenses. Larkin * * dealing * * * gives you double retail value. * * *. You get in addition, without cost, the saved middlemen's expenses in a premium that alone sells for $10 at retail." But if the first part of this advertisement is true, those middlemen's expenses have already been saved in the "double retail value" which the "Larkin direct factory-to-family dealing" gives. But notwithstanding that, "in addition" comes the $10 premium. In other words, the Larkin people are endeavoring to create the impression that they first name prices on their products which save all middlemen's profits, and in addition to that throw in a premium worth $10 at reta This, of course, they could not d and do not do. It is just as fal that "every Larkin offer" saves 1 per cent. In soap, for example, t chief Larkin product, the combin profits of twice the number of mi dlemen at twice the rate actual made would not equal 100 per ce

The Larkin scheme is not a fak except so far as it is made one b the Larkin Co's own deceitful a vertising.

The Oleo Question Again.

The oleo interests are aga credited with the intention of as ing the next Co gress to repeal t 10-cent tax yellow oleo. Co tainly the time is riper for th purposes than it has ever been b fore. Fine creamery butter rang from 36 to 38 cents per pound wholesale, which is at least 8 cen per pound above normal. The ol people will point to this as a re son why the public should have t cheaper substitute at a more reaso able price than the 10-cent tax w allow. A conclusive answer, ho ever, would seem to be that ole even after paying the 10-cent ta is still far below the price of bu ter. This would certainly give the call if the people wanted it.

While the high price of butter unquestionably induced in the ma by the scarcity of milk, one cau is the scarcity of available storag butter. The Chicago packers, w comprise what is called the Butt Trust, are accredited with produ ing this result by scouring the cou try last June and buying enormo quantities of butter. Their object believed to have been two-fol First, the making of money by t enhancement of the butter price, a second, giving color by the enhanc ment of the butter price to the ol argument which they expect to su mit to the next Congress. Much this butter is still held. If release it would greatly relieve the sit ation, but the greedy holders wa to squeeze the last drop of gain o of it if they can.

They may succeed in reducin the oleo tax, but the "Groce World" has no particular fears th they will.

Peaches are now coming pract cally only from New York Stat and the season is almost over. I ordinary baskets the price rang from $1.25 to $1.75, and the dema is light.

The Price Saves Us Competition

One reason which lies at the bottom of all package coffee is that coffee in a small carton will keep fresher than coffee in a bag.

But many package coffees are little if any better than bulk coffee, because the carton is loose or carelessly sealed and the contents soon get as stale as if there were no carton.

In our 25-cent leader coffee, Moco-Mo Coffee, the freshly roasted coffee is first sealed in a bag, and the bag is then again sealed in a carton. This double sealing holds the coffee aroma intact until your customer opens the carton in her own home. "The coffee in the bag, the bag in the carton."

There's of course no great secret about packing coffee in two packages. Other manufacturers could do it, but they won't, particularly on a 25-cent coffee, because it costs too much.

The New York Letter

Diamond Match Company to Dine Retail Grocers. Trade May Appeal Old Label Decision. Stickers Too Expensive. Trouble Over Government Red Tape in Admitting Foreign Food Products. Complaint Against Severe State Food Regulations.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, October 4, 1907.

Members of the Executive Committee of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association, who are to meet here next Tuesday, will be entertained at luncheon in the Cosmopolitan Hotel as the guests of State Secretary Charles Thorpe, and afterward will go to Brooklyn, where they will hold a business session in the rooms of the local association. Later all will be the guests of former Secretary Fred. Mason, now of the Diamond Match Co., at dinner in the Imperial Hotel in Brooklyn. The United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn will hold a regular meeting that night and it is possible that the members of the committee will make a call during the session.

Although the Board of Food and Drug Inspection decided against the jobbers on their request for more time to use up old labels, the Executive Committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association is persevering in its efforts to obtain some concessions. A meeting with this end in view was held Wednesday and it was given out yesterday than an appeal may be taken to the three secretaries having charge of the matter.

The jobbers, it is learned, no longer hope to get a general extension of the time for using old labels in, but hope to get permission to use certain kinds of old labels in which the variation from the regulations is deemed slight. Some jobbers are going ahead, however, in the belief that no further concessions will be made and are turning out and using only labels that comply in all respects with the rules.

Until this month the use of stickers to cover up parts of the old labels and to supplement the statements on such labels has been satisfactory to the authorities at Washington, minor discrepancies being overlooked. The jobbers admit that it is possible by the use of stickers to make the labels comply fully with the law, but say that this would prove about as expensive, in some instances, as printing new labels.

Reports received here from Washington are to the effect that the officials are not inclined to reopen the question and have their minds quite well made up in favor of requiring a rigid adherence after this to the label requirements. The suspicion is entertained in some quarters, it is said, that the jobbers here, in seeking delay, have more in mind than the saving of the expense of printing and pasting new labels. It has been suggested by some who have discussed the subject that the manufacturers and jobbers in some cases are really trying to continue certain of the old abuses for a year or so longer and therefore have tried to get a continuance of the lenient attitude shown thus far as to labels. The jobbers say that they have no other wish than to save the expense of obtaining entirely new sets of labels while they still have large quantities of old stock on hand.

Importers of various food products are complaining quite loudly because many importations are detained in the Customs House, sometimes for weeks, pending a decision as to whether or not the labels are in accord with the regulations. The complaint is even louder when the decision is against the importer, as has happened in several instances, and he has been obliged to send back the shipment or place new labels on the cans.

One of the complaints is as to olive oil. As the bottles in the cases do not hold quarts, they are admitted as "bottles" and not as quarts—the old practice to a large extent. But the authorities here will not admit the so-called "half bottles." It is held that the latter are smaller bottles, but are not halves of bottles. The policy of the department, it is said, is to encourage the statement on the labels of the exact quantity of oil instead of passing the packages as bottles or half bottles, although the former is allowed.

On some of the delayed shi ments a word or two of the labe has been in French and this h caused trouble. On others the a rangement of the lines has not co plied with the regulations or t type of some part of the labels h been too small. These matters see trivial to the importer, exasperate by the delay in getting his shi ments. But the representatives the Government point out that eve the displacing of a comma may di rupt the meaning of a sentence an that as the regulations were draw to prevent deception the only saf procedure is to follow them closel

In one way even the importe see an advantage to come aft everything settles down to smoot working order. It is that all bein treated alike the field will be fai and there will be no opportunity fo officials to favor their friends or t force tribute from people in th trade.

* * *

Six of the Western States, it i said by some jobbers, are enforcing regulations that are unreasonably severe. The Dakotas, Wisconsin Minnesota, Iowa and Illinoi adopted the regulations after a con ference of representatives. The rules to which the jobbers object have to do with coloring preserva tives and the setting forth on labels of the real manufacturer's name and address.

* * *

Although potatoes are unusually high for this time of year, some grocers have bought larger quantities than they ever did before, in the expectation that there will be still higher prices. The same course is being followed in various other lines.

* * *

While some of the press work of the commercial dailies is designed to give the idea that there is a great rush of buyers in the wholesale grocery trade, with a scarcity of almost every thing and a probability of there not being enough to go around, the statements are said to be exaggerated by some of the jobbers. Conservative men in the trade talk of the conditions as being not far from the ordinary, with a fairly satisfactory trade. Retailers seem inclined to take about the same view.

The advance in prices of various food products continues the subject of much discussion. The fact that when things are high people are one to buy in the largest quanti- is illustrated now to a consider- e extent. Even some steady- ing grocers are speculating a lit- to the extent of buying some- at larger quantities than usual of e or another article that they nk will go still higher.

He said at he does not believe it will pay import any high grade butter, cause of the duty, but if imported tter is to enter the market here st of it will probably come from nada. "But the held butter has t yet been put on the market in y quantity," he said. "The hold- think that they will get still gher prices. When they begin to go it will make quite a differ- e, and I think that there will be nty of butter without importing ."

Delivery horses and wagons are still being stolen at all-too-frequent intervals from the grocers. One of the latest victims of the horse thieves is George Buckmann, 2850 Broadway. His horse and wagon, he says, were stolen Tuesday while the driver had left the wagon for a short time. On the wagon were painted his name and street number, also "Cathedral Heights Grocery" across the top and on each side. The entire outfit disappeared and the police have no clue.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking f the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tri several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribe probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of wi dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing windo displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily ne or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully a perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangeme should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black i (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has been fairly active and steady during the past week. There have been no changes in price with the exception of Pingsueys, which are quoted 1 cent higher on the other side. Naturally this will affect the market on this side if it is maintained. The demand for all grades of tea is fair, and shows no speculation whatever.

Coffee.

The market for Brazil coffees continues very narrow. Options are slightly higher. The buying public obstinately refuses, however, to come into the speculative market, and the only factor which gives the market any semblance of strength is a good, active, seasonable business for actual Rio and Santos coffee, prices for which show no change. Mild coffees are somewhat excited, notably Bogotas. The tendency seems upward, and it is reported that large interests have been heavy buyers, particularly of Bogotas again. Very probably a main reason for this movement is the large advance in Java coffee. Sales of Java during the week showed an advance of 1 cent per pound over the sales of two weeks ago. Since May last interior Javas have advanced 4½ cents, thus confirming the "Grocery World's" prophecies exactly The demand for these coffees is much greater than the supply, and further advances seem likely. Mocha is steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market shows no change for the week. There have been some fluctuations in both directions, but the net result is about steady. Refined sugar is unchange and in very fair demand. Stock in jobbers' hands are lower tha for some time, and general buyin will probably soon begin. If it doe there is every probability of an ad vance in refined, as the margin i now only around 70 cents per 10 which is lower than the refiners like

Syrup and Molasses.

As the result of the advancin market in corn, glucose has ad vanced 5 points during the pas week. Compound syrup moved u ½ cent for the same reason. Th demand for compound syrup ha been fair, following the coo weather. Sugar syrup is in fair de mand at unchanged prices. Mo lasses is unchanged and quie Prices on the first new crop can juice should be forthcoming i about two weeks. As reported, th crop bids fair to be large.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is stil very much excited. New Norway are very scarce and exceedingly high. It is difficult to quote a price because the buyers' ruling desire i to get the fish regardless of price Anything good in fat Norways wil bring almost any price in reason The Irish mackerel situation is also firm. There has been no further ad vance in new Irish, but holders are now talking of advancing old fish and would probably be successful i they attempted it. The market is extremely firm. Shore mackerel are also firmly held. Cod, hake and haddock have not yet had the weather they wanted and are there fore quiet. Prices are unchanged Sardines, both domestic and foreign, are firm, unchanged and quiet An advance of 15 cents in quarter oils, however, was announced to ke effect October 15th. Salmon firm and unchanged. Consumptive demand fair.

Canned Goods.

The cool weather of the past eek, accompanied by the sure approach of the end of the packing eason, has noticeably stiffened the narket during the past week. A air quotation is now 87½ cents, at hich large sales have been made or the West, though practically one as yet for this market The utlook is strong rather than weak. he trade are buying corn in markets outside of Philadelphia, but ere the market is dull. The situation is undeniably strong, and hoepeg and Maine style corn are orth more money. Practically all ackers of Maine corn will deliver o to 40 per cent. short. Peas are uiet, the market being steady and airly active. Some sales of spot pples have been made at $3.75 delivered, and one packer has named a uture price of $3.50 f. o. b. The utlook is strong, but prices will robably not go higher than the resent range. Peaches are unchanged and show no improvement. he demand absorbs the entire pack without half trying. The Baltimore ine of small canned goods is unchanged, barring string beans, which now average 70 cents. The California line is unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are quiet and show no change, either in spot or future fruit. Peaches are also unchanged and quiet. Raisins are selling well to arrive, at prices that show no change. There has been a particularly good demand for foreign raisins, practically all shipments of which have been sold to arrive. The first new crop currants are just about due. The market on the other side is higher, but shows almost no change here. Apricots are slow, scarce and high. New York State apples are still very high and firm. Evaporated apples from California are now being offered at 9 to 9½ cents f. o. b., which means a delivered price somewhat less than the future price of New York State fruit.

Beans and Peas.

The pea bean market is still excited. Bad weather in the growing sections has inflated holders' ideas considerably, and some of them have endeavored to get $2.35 for indifferent stock during the past week. This is far above the market, however, a fair idea of which is $2.20 to $2.25. After beans commence to move, the price may go off somewhat. Marrows still average $2.40, and the demand is fair. California limas are about unchanged, the spot large way quotation being 6 cents for old beans and 6½ cents for new. A fair demand is reported. Split peas are unchanged and in good demand. Sales of new green whole peas have been made to arrive at $1.75. No price has yet been named on new split green peas, but the opening will probably be high. Scotch peas are now quoted at $2.10, as against $1.85 a few weeks ago.

Butter.

All grades of butter have advanced 1 cent during the past week. There is a very active speculative and consumptive demand. The make is very much below normal for the season, and the outlook is for prevailing prices during the balance of the year. Very firm conditions exist in every butter producing section. The extreme high price, however, seems not to interfere with the consumption.

Eggs.

The egg market is about unchanged from a week ago. Prices are unchanged and the consumptive demand is good. The withdrawals of eggs from storage are about normal, but the receipts of fresh eggs are very light. The bulk of the receipts shows poor quality and have to be sold relatively low. The market is in a wholly satisfactory condition and no radical change is looked for in the near future.

Cheese.

The make of cheese is considerably shorter than it has ever been before at this season. In all producing sections the price has advanced 1 cent per pound and is now around 15 cents per pound. This is an almost unprecedented price, and is due entirely to the short supply of milk. The consumptive demand continues very good considering the price. Stocks in storage are very light and the future price depends on the consumptive demand.

Produce.

Sweet potatoes, primes, 35 to 40 cents per basket; seconds, 15 to 20 cents, demand good; white potatoes, 35 to 40 cents per basket, 65 to 75 cents per bushel, demand good; eggplants, 25 to 40 cents per basket, demand good; cabbage, 10 to 25 cents per basket, demand good; savoy cabbage, 60 cents per barrel, demand fair; turnips, yellow and

MARKET NOTES.

The cold weather has considerably curtailed the receipts of tomatoes. The range of price is 25 to 30 cents per basket, while the canners are paying 15 to 18 cents. The quality is not particularly good, but the price will rapidly advance from now on.

The cool weather has hurt the melon trade considerably, and the demand is now only moderate. The price ranges from 5 to 30 cents.

Cantaloupes, outside of Colorado Rocky Fords, are about done. The latter range from $1.75 to $2, and the demand is slow.

Eggplants rule at a moderate price—20 to 25 cents per basket. The demand is only fair.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Mr. V. C. Cramer, the well-known broker, is buying for his friends this week upon the arrival of a baby girl at his home. The week just past has been devoted to buying for friends only. Mr. Cramer desires the "Grocery World" to announce that during the coming week he will buy for acquaintances. All those having a bowing acquaintance with Mr. Cramer will present themselves at his office, 123 South Front street, at any time after 11 o'clock A. M., which is the usual time the happy father now gets down to business. Applicants will form in line and keep orderly.

All Swiss Milk Chocolate Advances.

Three Manufacturers Doing Bulk of Business Advance Prices 25 Per Cent. by Agreement. Present and Former Price-Lists. Scarce Cocoa the Cause.

A few weeks ago the "Grocery World" stated that a meeting had just been held abroad by the large manufacturers of Swiss milk chocolate, who were reported to have agreed to advance their prices to the American trade. There can no longer be any doubt that this agreement was actually made, as the three large concerns selling the bulk of the Swiss milk chocolate which is sold in the United States simultaneously advanced their prices during the past week. The concerns joining are Peters & Co., Cailler & Co., and Suchard. The advance amounts to about 25 per cent. and is particularly significant, since it puts all three concerns on precisely the same price basis. Prior to the advance the prices of the various concerns differed somewhat.

To show the extent of the advance the "Grocery World" gives a full list of the new prices issued by one of the three concerns named, compared with the former prices. These prices are now also the prices of the other concerns:—

Tablets.	New.	Former.
5c. size, gross.....	$5.40	$4.75
10c. size, doz.....	.90	.75
20c. size, doz.....	1.80	1.40

5c. size, gross.....	5.20	4.50
10c. size, doz.....	.95	.80
20c. size, doz.....	1.80	1.44

This advance will naturally cause an immediate advance in retail prices, and will make Swiss milk chocolate as sold in this country a decided luxury.

The cause of the advance is scarce and high cocoa bean prices.

Kipling tells a fascinating story of "How the new ship found herself." As she leaves port on her trip the creaking of fresh joints, the groaning of weighted masts, the busy thug, thug of new machinery is translated into words that reveal the inevitable disturbance which must attend the launching and early progress of a new venture. Time and patience alone can eliminate them.
The Brooklyn Market has "found herself." It is one of the oldest stores in the city. Newness has worn down to smoothness of an almost faultless service; stocks are ample in every way, and it has become the "Quality Store."

Let's take up the typographical faults first. The border that surrounds this advertisement is too heavy. The name and address should have gone at the bottom instead of at the top, and the space now given to the name and address should have been devoted to headlines of some kind. An advertisement should put its best foot foremost, which means that the first thing that catches the eye, i. e., the heading, should be as spicy and interesting as it can possibly be made. An advertisement headed with a name and address puts its worst foot foremost, for there is nothing less interesting about an advertisement than the advertiser's name and address.

The paragraph headings in this advertisement are set in too heavy type—they make the advertisement look blotched and blotted. Moreover, they should be set in caps and lower case instead of all capitals. It is never a good plan to divide an advertisement like this into panels of different widths and sizes. It gives an impression of confusion. Make the panels of the same width, whether they are of the same length or not. This could have been done in this advertisement by dividing the advertisement into two columns, or even three columns would have made a better appearance.

The wording of the various paragraphs of this advertisement is good. In fact, I regard it as rather unusually good. It has that flavor of sincere enthusiasm which creates an impression on the reader. The little panel beginning "Kipling tells," etc., is out of place where it is. If it belongs anywhere, it belongs in the heading as an introduction. As a matter of fact, however, the advertisement would not have lost one iota of selling force had this been omitted entirely. The second paragraph might have gone in an introduction, the first sentence being amended as follows: "The Brooklyn market, like Kipling's new ship, has 'found herself.'"

Magazine Notes.

"The Whited Sepulchre," The Tale of Pelée.

Editors of magazines which publish novelettes do not, as a rule, find life a bed of roses, for really good specimens of this type of story are hard to find. When a writer has a plot suitable for a novelette, in nine cases out of ten he can just as easily elaborate it into a longer story, and will insist upon doing so. Occasionally, however, one is secured that is of the requisite length—about 40,000 words—and that possesses all the other desirable qualities, and when it is, there is much editorial rejoicing thereat. Such a novelette is that in the October "Lippincott's"—"The Whited Sepulchre," by Will Levington Comfort. Its scene is laid in the ill-fated city of Saint Pierre, Martinique, at the time of the eruption of Mont Pelée. Constable, the hero, is a wealthy geologist, who has come there for the twofold purpose of visiting his sweetheart and of studying the volcano. When danger threatens he tries to remove the the girl to a place of safety, but her mother believes his fears to be groundless, so she interposes an objection. As a result they are still within the danger zone when the crash comes. The description of the eruption, and of the shambles which the place becomes after the catastrophe, forms a bit of descriptive writing of which neither Kipling nor any other writer need be ashamed. It is quite as graphic and soul stirring as the account of the eruption of Vesuvius in Bulwer Lytton's famous novel, "The Last Days of Pompeii."

Other notable stories in this issue of "Lippincott's" are "The Swan Song," by George L. Knapp; "Osla Whale Hunting," by Edith Rickert, author of "The Reaper" and "The Golden Hawk;" "The Martyr," by Owen Oliver; "Her College Visit," by Robert Sterling Blair; "Miss Carmichael and the Janitor," by Adele Marie Shaw; "Fat Fallon," by Alfred Damon Runyon, and "Pluck versus Diplomacy," by H. B. Dean. Edward Stratton Holloway contributes a pleasing paper on "Modern Literature and Modern Life," and there are other essays on various subjects by Mary Moss, Fred G. Blakeslee, George L. Knapp, Edwin L. Sabin and Louise Satterthwaite. There are also several charming bits of verse, and the usual department of humor, "Walnuts and Wine." Altogether it is a banner number.

When you order catsup, be definite, specify Snider's Catsup. You might as well have the best—the cost is about the same.

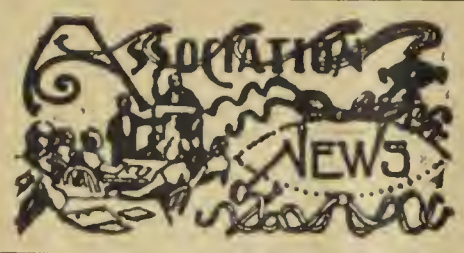
The German-American Coffee Company

Growers, Importers and Roasters

406 Greenwich St., New York, N.Y.



Illinois.

The Illinois Retail Grocers' Association has formulated the following resolutions and sent a copy to practically every retail merchant in the State. When signed it will be presented to Congress:—

To the Honorable President, Senators and Members House of Representatives, United States of America.

Honorable Sirs:—The Postmaster-General, Hon. George von L. Meyer, having in public addresses announced his intention to recommend the enlargement of parcels post service up to ten pounds, and believing such an act will not conserve the interest of the masses, and for several reasons herewith given, among others, the undersigned vigorously oppose the enactment of a Parcels Post act for the United States.

1st. General conditions in our country are not on a parity with those of foreign countries where parcels post is in operation, as for instance, government ownership and absolute control of railroads, and other similar conditions. The area of the United States is vastly greater than that of foreign countries (being twelve times greater than England, Germany and Switzerland combined).

2d. All items entering into the cost of transportation in our country, especially wages, are very much higher than abroad, therefore comparisons with foreign countries are not applicable.

3d. The parcels post must necessarily create an enormous deficiency in the postal department, since the average cost of mail from origin to delivery at present is 17 cents per pound, and would be greater with increased service and equipment necessary for handling increased merchandise shipments. The revenue derived under the proposed act will be about one-sixth the present average cost of service, and the deficiency will greatly exceed one hundred million dollars per annum. Such a deficiency will be out of proportion to any corresponding benefit to all the people.

4th. Parcels post can benefit only comparatively small number of the people, as only certain commodities can be transported by parcels post. Particular benefit can only be derived by a number of industries and special class of merchants.

5th. We believe it unjust to enact a law which will, in its operation, create a great loss to the postal department, which loss must be borne through extra taxation upon a large majority of citizens who derive no benefit.

6th. We believe a greater benefit to all the people will be had by reducing the rate on first-class postage to one cent.

7th. Parcels post, in its practical operation, will benefit only a special class of merchants and corporations principally located in the large trade centers, thus facilitating the bringing about of a concentration of the retailing of merchandise by a few large interests which will be detrimental, and seriously cripple the future prospect and largely reduce the number of smaller dealers, and practically destroy an esteemed avocation which is a necessity to the welfare and maintenance of the smaller communities.

8th. Being in favor of cheaper rates on the transportation of merchandise, but deem it unjust for the government to bear the excessive cost through a very large deficiency in the postal department as a remedy therefor. In order to bring about the desired relief we believe it the duty of Congress to regulate the charges by express companies, the same as has been done with railroad freight rates, so that the same may not be excessive.

Therefore the undersigned protest and petition your Honorable body against the passage of such an act.

Cleveland, Ohio.

At the last meeting of the Cleveland (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association a communication was read from a large local produce jobber, which makes a point that probably the grocers of other places could consider with profit:—

Mr. George J. Schaefer, President, Cleveland Retail Grocers' Association.

Dear Sir:—As a member of the Cleveland Retail Grocers' Association, and also as a wholesale dealer, doing business with the retailers of this city, I have a matter which I would be pleased to bring to the attention of our Retail Grocers' Association as soon as it is convenient for them to consider the matter.

The season is now approaching when the retail grocers will begin to lay in their winter supplies of potatoes. The aggregate amount of all the potatoes which will be stored by retail grocers of Cleveland is enormous. I find in our dealings with the retail grocers that for years it has been the habit of the majority of them not to weigh their potatoes, but they have been allowing the sellers to bring out a load of potatoes, put them in their basement or in his warehouse without being weighed by the grocer himself.

This has been a direct invitation to the seller to deliver short weights, and it has now become common talk among wholesalers that the retail grocers have been receiving short weights on their deliveries of potatoes for years; so much so that legitimate dealers who have made it a practice to deliver 60 pounds to the bushel have been practically driven out of the business, and the majority of the potatoes have been delivered during the past few years by parties with whom we have been unable to compete in prices, although we buy our potatoes directly from farmers and sell them on a margin as close as it is possible for them to be handled.

We have known of instances where we have offered retail grocers potatoes at a lower price than that at which we sold the same potatoes to another jobber, who, in turn, sold the potatoes to the same grocer to whom we had offered them. If you do not get my point, please ask me for further explanation regarding this particular matter.

A grocer who does not weigh his potatoes does not know what he is paying for them. A grocer who does not weigh his potatoes does not know whether he is making any money on them. He has no means of knowing. He may think that he is paying 80 cents a bushel for potatoes, and in reality he is paying over $1 per bushel.

It is time for the retail grocer to wake up on this point. No wonder the majority of them are hard up and can't make any money. If they conduct all their business along the same lines they do their potato business, it is surprising that they can stay in business at all.

In making our plea to the retail grocers to weigh their potatoes we are simply asking for a square deal. We want the retail grocers to weigh our potatoes as well as the others. Make every man deliver 60 pounds to the bushel, and then we will know where we are at, and so will the grocer, but if the retail grocer expects us to compete with our competitors in price he must insist on our competitor delivering the same number of pounds to the bushel as we do.

The writer regards this as the most important matter that can be handled by the Retail Grocers' Association. If the problem is solved properly it will save the retail grocers thousands of dollars every year. The writer would suggest that uniform sacks be used, and that the sellers be required to have his name stamped on the sacks, so that in case the grocer should wish at any time to weigh any of the sacks, he could do so in the absence of the seller. It is not my object to appeal to your prejudices, but rather to your sense of fairness.

THE W. A. BANKS CO.,
By L. A. Banks.

The above resulted in the adoption of the following resolution:—

Whereas, it appears to be to the best interest of the trade that retail dealers buying potatoes should weigh the goods as received, and that for convenience in handling they be delivered in sacks of uniform size, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That members of this Board will hereafter accept potatoes delivered by commission men only in sacks of 100 pounds net weight, sacks to bear the name of the seller stamped thereon. We recommend that the members of the association adopt the same rule and enforce it.

Shamokin, Pa.

The Association of Business and Professional Men of Shamokin has accomplished reforms far beyond what is realized by themselves or the community, first, as the Merchants' Protective Association, and now as the Business Men's Association.

This, that, or the other benefit rendered, as soon as accomplished, has been forgotten, even by the members of their own organization. Peddlers, who at one time covered the community as the "Locusts of Egypt" in Biblical history, have been driven out, thus rendering to legitimate business its deserts. Trading stamps, premium gifts, lotteries, and kindred evils, were overcome by the energetic labors of this association, and by constant effort have been entirely eradicated from the community.

This association has also adopted strenuous rules prohibiting among themselves, and others by their influence, the purchase of tickets for church festivals, balls, benefits, etc. The latter for a time was a complete success and would have re-ıained so had it not been for their wn fear that they would perhaps rive from their counters a little ustom.

One of the rules adopted, and to ome extent adhered to, was that rohibiting illegitimate advertising n programmes of all kinds, society, usiness, church and other directores; annuals, guides, time tables, otel registers, etc., which was one f the greatest evils. All business nen admit they do not derive one ingle dollar's worth of benefit from uch advertising, yet personal influnce on the part of some one will nduce them to depart from the rule.

Wells & Richardson Co's Triumph With Their Purely Vegetable Butter Color.

Some over thirty years ago the Wells & Richardson Co. embarked in the manufacture of a Vegetable Butter Color. This was put on the market and held its place at the head of the list until the coal tar products were produced. For a time, use was made of these coal tar products to such an extent as to crowd out the use of the vegetable produets in the manufacture of butter color. Some six years ago, seeing the trend of opinion concerning food products in the United States, they began a series of experiments toward the production of a perfect Vegetable Butter Color. The results of these experiments is the Dandelion Brand Butter Color (purely vegetable). This color has been tested since that time, and is in use generally throughout the United States by the leading butter makers and giving perfect satisfaction.

Owing to the enormous demand for the Dandelion Brand Butter Color, the Wells & Richardson Company now announce that they will, in future, confine themselves entirely to the manufacture of this color.

In a number of States, since the passage of the Federal Pure Food and Drug Act of June 30, 1906, under conditions largely theoretical, laws have been passed prohibiting, and in other States there has been, and is, a great deal of agitation concerning the use of coal tar colors in food products. Under these conditions, and after a careful considération of the matter, they have decided to discontinue the manufacture and sale of their Improved Butter Color, of which the coloring basis is a coal tar product, and from this time to confine their efforts entirely to their Dandelion Brand Butter Color (purely vegetable), which is without question harmless, and is guaranteed by the Wells & Richardson Company as meeting the requirements of all State and Federal pure food laws, and as not being deleterious or injurious to health.

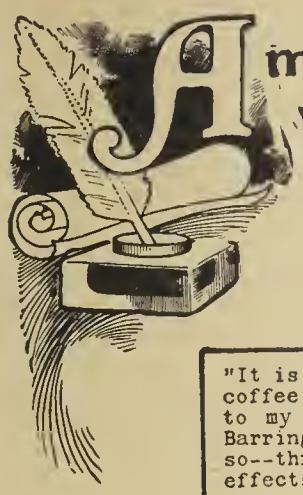
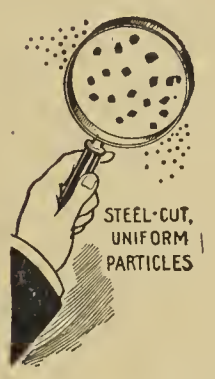
THE BRADSTREET SYSTEM, Rochester, N. Y.



America's most noted authoress writes, from her home on the Hudson, that Barrington Hall is the only coffee she has been able to drink in many years:

"It is many years since I have been able to drink coffee while engaged in literary work, but I find to my great delight that I can drink as much Barrington Hall Coffee as I desire, and have done so--three large cup-fulls a day--without any ill effects at all."—Name given on request.

Barrington Hall
The Steel-Cut Coffee



Barrington Hall is pure, high grade coffee, prepared by our patented process—a common-sense method of treating the berry whereby the substances which contribute nothing to its flavor and healthfulness are removed, and the coffee flavor is preserved to a remarkable degree.

By our process all dust and the bitter cellulose skin, evidently placed by nature around the heart of the berry to protect it, are removed and thrown away; and when you buy a pound of Barrington Hall you get a pound of the best part of the coffee berry only. You can enjoy its delicious flavor without fear of ill effects. This is the experience of thousands who had given up coffee drinking, many of whom have written to tell us so.

"Steel-cut," means that the coffee is cut (not ground) into fine, even particles. This cutting does not crush the little oil cells as does grinding and the rich, aromatic oil (Food Product), which makes coffee flavor, is preserved. This explains why a pound of Barrington Hall will make 15 to 20 cups more of perfect full strength coffee than would the same coffee if ground in a coffee mill.

Packed only in sealed tins

PRICE: 35c to 40c per pound, according to locality. If your grocer tries to sell you something "Just as good" he has his own interest, not yours, in mind. Write us and we can tell you how and where to get Barrington Hall. If you accept an imitation, please do not judge our coffee by it.

"Barrington Hall" is a success. It has been a success from the start, when our advertising was a small affair compared with the kind we will do this season.

The above ad. is one of a series that will be in the big magazines from now until next July. Users of high-grade coffee are magazine readers.

Note the "free sample" offer. We send the sample and refer the customer to his nearest grocer who handles "Barrington Hall."

We sell to one grocer in a town; in cities we sell to one grocer in every section. There are still many valuable agencies open. To complete our distribution we make a liberal offer.

If you want to take advantage of this proposition to increase your trade on profitable high-grade coffee—Special high-grade coffee, which does not conflict with your regular lines, write us to-day. Don't wait until we have closed with some one else. We have to decline orders every day from merchants in closed territory.

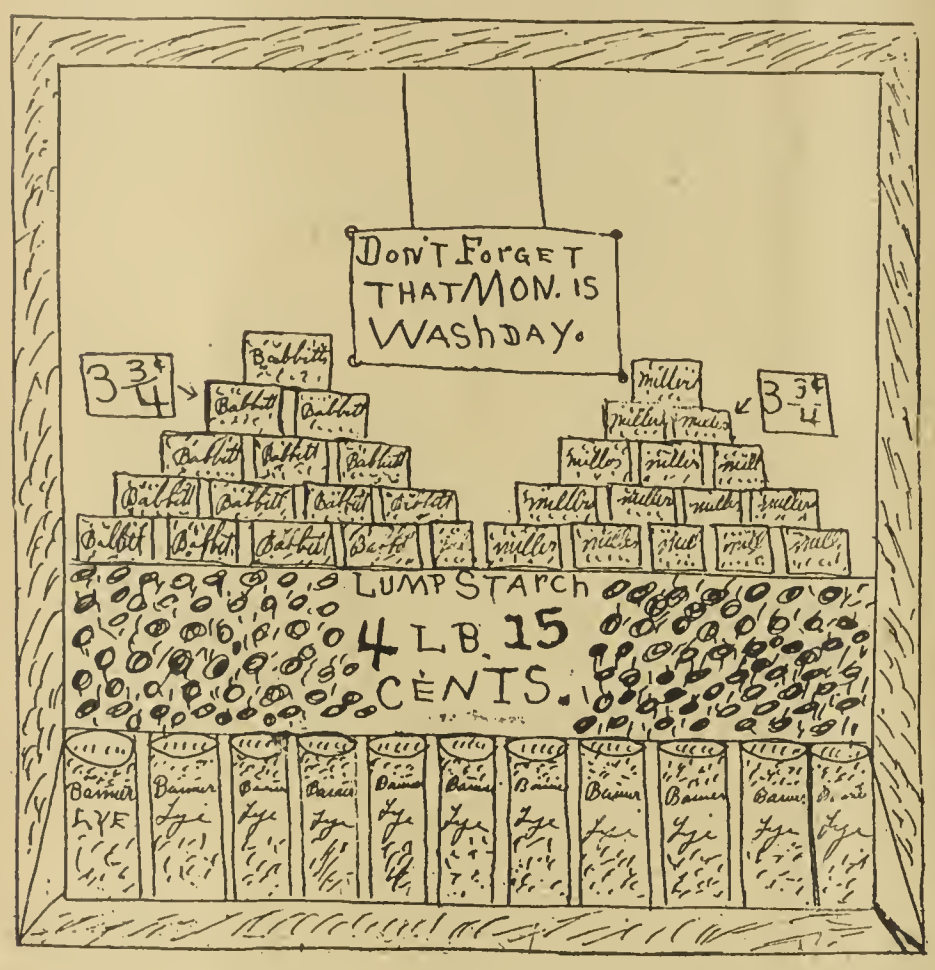
Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Washday Window.

I am sending a drawing of a laundry window, the one I am going to use as my display September 9th to 14th, inclusive.



Laundry window explanation, Banner lye in front, with lump starch right back of it. Babbitt's soap pyramid to left in rear of window, and Miller's on the right, with price cards to the side of each pile of soap.

Also a large card hanging in rear, bearing these words:—

> DON'T FORGET THAT MONDAY IS WASHDAY.

It makes a very nice show and an inexpensive display.

Wm. C. Cooper,
Duke and Philadelphia sts., York, Pa.

A Varied Window.

It is our general rule to put but one or two articles in window. By putting in a quantity of each, or by fixing window so it appears as a quantity, we have derived the best results. Our object in this window was to introduce Indian Corn starch. We put in Uneeda biscuits and laundry starch at cut prices to attract attention to window. While we generally put signs with prices on everything, as you see in the picture, in this case our idea was to have them come in to inquire as to Indian corn starch, when we explained and demonstrated to them the quality of this starch. We found it worked very well.

The Current Pickle Crop.

Below is a summary for this season's crop of pickles, as near as can be estimated. In the majority of the States the farmers are still delivering some cucumbers to the factories and will continue to do so until frost, etc., stops them, as the factories will keep open until the crop is completely done for, because every little bit helps (this year). The cucumber crop of 1907 will close with the smallest yield given to the packers for many years past, and as the receipts which may come in from now on will have practically no effect upon the market, consequently this crop issue will be the final one for 1907. Summary: Arkansas, 50 per cent. crop; California, full crop; Colorado, good crop; Connecticut, 50 per cent. crop; Illinois, 30 per cent. crop; Indiana, 35 per cent. crop; Iowa, 35 per cent. crop; Kansas, 60 per cent. crop; Kentucky, 30 per cent. crop; Maryland, 40 per cent. crop; Massachusetts, 40 per cent. crop; Michigan, 40 per cent. crop; Minnesota, 45 per cent. crop; Missouri, 35 per cent. crop; Nebraska, 50 per cent. crop; New Jersey, 60 per cent. crop; New York, 35 per cent. crop; Ohio, 25 per cent. crop; Oregon, 75 per cent. crop; Rhode Island, 60 per cent. crop; Utah, 50 per cent. crop; Virginia, 35 per cent. crop; Washington, full crop; West Virginia, 50 per cent. crop; Wisconsin, 40 per cent. crop.

Foreign Sardines Are Extremely Scarce.

The fishing for Norway sardines has been a total failure of late and hardly any fish have been taken to keep the factories busy half the working time. The factories are unable to cope with the demand and orders which have been taken several months ago are not filled yet, for the simple reason that factories have not sufficient fish to execute their orders. In consequence of this, anchovies are very scarce an none have been shipped as yet. A advance of 20 per cent. over la season's price of anchovies has a ready occurred. There is only very short time left for fishing sa dines in Norway, that is the f fall caught sardines, which a the ones that are so highly a preciated; and it is almost certai that there will be quite a shortag of those dark quality Norwa smoked sardines this season. I France there has been no chang whatsoever in the sardine situatio there is hardly a case of sardin to be had and none being packe Some of the packers have cable over asking whether they shou make dingley ¼ tins containi about six fish, but while buyers ma be inclined to take even six fish t the can when nothing else is to h had, importers here do not feel th they wish to stock up with this siz which is undesirable for the Amer can market; but even with six fis they could not fill very many can as there is absolutely no catch. I Portugal fishermen have gone qui some out of their way to catch a fe sardines, and they have succeede in taking a few catches far off th coast. Our packer has shipped u a few hundred cases, and it does n supply one hundredth part of th demand.

Important Notice to the Trade

Under the Federal Pure Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, coal tar colors were not in terms prohibited from use in food products. So far as our experience, experiments and chemical tests can determine, we are convinced that our Improved Butter Color of which the coloring basis is a coal tar product, when used in the quantities designated and for the purposes intended, is neither injurious nor deleterious to health.

However, under the Federal Food Inspection Decision No. 76, issued recently, it is ruled that "the use in food for any purpose of any mineral dye or any coal tar dye, except those coal tar dyes hereinafter listed, will be grounds for prosecution." None of the seven shades of coal tar dyes mentioned, which under this ruling, and pending further investigation, are allowable for use in food products, can be employed in the manufacture of Butter Colorings, for the reason that the orange or yellow shades, which would be the only shades that could possibly be used, are not soluble in fats or oils. Therefore it would be impossible to put out a coal tar butter color with any of the shades which are at present allowed for use by the Federal Decision.

In a number of States, since the passage of the Federal Pure Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, under conditions largely theoretical, laws have been passed or rulings made prohibiting, and in other States there has been, and is, a great deal of agitation concerning the use of coal tar colors in food products. Under these conditions, and after a careful consideration of the matter, we have decided to offer to our trade in the United States only one brand of Butter Color, namely: our Dandelion Brand Butter Color (Purely Vegetable), which is without question harmless, and is guaranteed by us as meeting the requirements of all State and Federal Pure Food Laws, and as not being deleterious or injurious to health.

What Dr. Wiley Eats.

Some time ago when I said that if Dr. Wiley, the Government chemist, went on, about the only safe thing left to eat would be mother's milk, some of you fellows thought I was trying to crack a joke.

By George we're gettin' close to it in Pennsylvania.

Do you know what our Food Commissioner's just done to dried fruits? Said they were all illegal and he'd prosecute any grocer selling 'em! What d'ye think of that? No more peaches or apricots or prunes or raisins! How is that for high? That's going some, ain't it?

It's all Dr. Wiley's doings. To be sure the order came from the Pennsylvania Commissioner, but it came through what Dr. Wiley had said about the goods; our Commissioner Foust was only his pupil.

It's a funny thing—in this case the pupil has outstripped his teacher. For Dr. Wiley isn't interfering at all with the sale of dried fruits throughout the country, while his pupil, the Pennsylvania Food Commissioner, has sat down on 'em like a ton of bricks.

What's the Pennsylvania Commissioner's name—Foust, ain't it? It's a good name, for if he goes on the way he's begun he bids fair to be a regular little devil.

I often wonder what Dr. Wiley eats. I wonder whether he's consistent. I don't see how he can be. According to him, darned near all our food is poisoned. Now, if he really believes that, he can't conscientiously eat any of it, and if he don't eat any of it, how's he keepin' alive? Nobody's making food specially for him, as far's I can see.

Tell us the secret, Doctor dear, is it mother's milk?

My own personal opinion is that the good doctor eats every day a dozen foods that he condemns. He must, if he eats anything, for it seems to me he condemns just about everything, even colored butter. Still he may not; he may be eating only that one.

I dreamed the other night I was invited for dinner at Dr. Wiley's house. I remember that I looked eagerly forward to the meal just to solve this problem—what does Dr. Wiley eat? I dreamed I got to the house about half-past five and spent some time discussing various heavy scientific subjects with the Doctor. But I couldn't smell anything cooking, though I sniffed like an old dog with the asthma.

Finally we were called down to dinner, and I said to myself, "now I'll know." We were led down a corridor, not into any dining room, but into a nursery!

I ain't a-going to tell you any more, but I found out what he ate all right. I didn't touch a thing, though I saw the Doctor eat his. I didn't eat any, because the Doctor ate first to show me how to take it, and when he thought he had showed me there wasn't any left.

It's curious how vivid that dream was. I don't suppose I'll ever forget it. I can close my eyes and see the Doctor feeding now. I remember saying to myself, "well, there's certainly nothing artificial or preserved about that food, anyway. Even the way he took it was perfectly natural."

Yes, it was one of the clearest dreams I ever had. The Doctor is fair, fat, bald and fifty—one of these cute Mellin's food babies with dimples in his knees. That night at dinner he wore the cutest little milking suit I ever saw. He told me he had always believed in having everything at a meal absolutely harmonious, so he wore little short blue socks and a Renaissance didy.

I never shall forget it, never. It's been on my mind a good bit since Mr. Foust's decree banishing dried fruits. It looks to me as if we were slowly being hemmed in. Soon there'll be nothing left but what Dr. Wiley eats. When there's only that what are we going to do for church suppers?

Seriously, do you fellows realize what this means? There are thousands of families who never know but two kinds of sweets—one is dried fruit of some kind, and the other is molasses or glucose syrup. Mr. Foust is going to prosecute everybody selling dried fruits, molasses or glucose syrup containing sulphur, which people who tell me say all of them do. Maybe not all brands, but most. That means, of course, that dried fruits, molasses or glucose syrup are not going to be sold—who's going to put his head in a sling if he knows it?

What are these poor devils going to do? By gad, it's a serious matter to them. With everything so high, I can see their finish pretty quick.

Nobody believes in food laws any more than I do, but nevertheless I believe that the time's soon coming when the most enthusiastic advocate of food laws will damn them for the most colossal nuisance we've ever had since time began!

"The Stroller,"
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—I have been an interested reader of your article in a recent issue of "The Grocery World" on the "Five Brethren."

I wish to state what I believe to be one reason for a great many hypocrites in the churches, and that is, that people are taught that God is a ferocious monster, willing, nay, anxious, to damn any or all of his creatures who do not meet the requirements of his just law to hopeless misery and endless torment. In the next breath they say that God is love and is anxious to save all he can from such a horrible fate, and has appointed them as preachers at a good salary to tell you such bad tidings of great misery for all except a few (the elect church).

This is in sharp contrast with the news that the angels brought to the shepherds when Christ was born. They said: "Behold, we bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people."

I hope you will carefully read the enclosed tracts, and if interested write for more either to me or the publishers.

Freely we have received, freely we give.

Yours, for the truth,
JOHN F. DAY.

How Dyes May Be Employed in Foods.

United States Department of Agriculture Surrounds With Drastic Regulations the Use of the Colors Which Decision 76 Permits to be Used.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Oct. 3, 1907.

Touching the use in food of the coal-tar dyes which the Board of Food and Drug Enforcement agreed could be used in Food Inspection Decision No. 76, a further decision (F. I. D. 77) has been issued during the past week. It surrounds the use of dye in food with extraordinary precautions. The text of the decision is as follows:—

CERTIFICATE AND CONTROL OF DYES PERMISSIBLE FOR USE IN COLORING FOODS AND FOODSTUFFS.

The Department of Agriculture is in receipt of a large number of inquiries concerning the interpretation to be put on that portion of F. I. D. 76 which refers to coal-tar dyes not inhibited for use in coloring foods and foodstuffs.

The term "manufacturer," as used in F. I. D. 76 and in the present decision, applies to a person or company responsible for the purification of the crude or raw dye for the purpose of placing it in a condition fit for use in foods and foodstuffs; or to the accredited selling agent in the United States of such person or company. Such accredited agent must file, on behalf of his foreign principal, if the latter does not file it, a manufacturer's certificate, and it will be considered that the responsibility for such certificate will rest upon the accredited agent and not upon the foreign principal.

For each permitted dye two certificates must be filed by the manufacturer, the first to be known as the "foundation certificate," the second known as the "manufacturer's certificate." It is suggested that the foundation certificate be in the following form:

FOUNDATION CERTIFICATE.

I, ..., the undersigned, residing at ..... (street address), in the city of..... county of ..... State of ..... hereby certify under oath that I have personally examined and tested for ..... (full name of concern), of ..... (city), county of ..... State of ..... the material known as ..... which corresponds to the coloring matter numbered ..... in A. G. Green's Edition (1904) of the Schultz-Julius "Systematic Survey of the Organic Coloring Matters," and of which a one (1) pound sample marked ..... is herewith submitted. I have found the said material to consist of that coloring matter only, to be free from harmful constituents, and not to contain any contamination due to imperfect or incomplete manufacture.

(Here insert a complete statement of all the tests applied to determine:
A. Identity.
B. Absence of
a. Mineral or metallic poisons.
b. Harmful organic constituents.
c. Contamination due to improper or incomplete manufacture.

Special attention should be given to setting forth fully the quantities or volume of each material and reagent employed, its strength or concentration, temperature, duration of treatment, limits of delicacy of tests employed, and any other information that is necessary to enable others to repeat accurately and correctly all the work herein referred to, and thus arrive at identical results. For each test performed, state what conclusions are drawn from it and why.)

.....
(Signature of chemist making the examination.)

CERTIFICATION.

For the manufacturer's certificate the following form is suggested:

MANUFACTURER'S CERTIFICATE.

I, ..., the undersigned, a resident of the United States, doing business at ..... (street address), in the city of ..... county of ..... State of ..... under the style of ..... (full name of concern), do hereby certify under oath that I am the manufacturer of the material known as ..... which corresponds to the coloring matter numbered ..... in the 1904 Green Edition of the Schultz-Julius Tables, of which the accompanying foundation certificate, signed by ..... the examining chemist, is the report of an analysis of a fair, average sample drawn from a total batch of ..... pounds. .....
(Signature of manufacturer.)

CERTIFICATION.

The foundation certificate must be filed with the Secretary of Agriculture at the time the first request is made of the Secretary to use any or all of the permitted dyes for coloring foods and foodstuffs.

A New Move

And an important one to grocers. There is scarcely a grocer or consumer within twenty-five miles of Philadelphia who does not know of Freihofer's Bread, Pie and Cakes. They have attained their unprecedented popularity solely on merit. We are now manufacturing Macaroni and Noodles. These goods we make like our other goods, of the finest materials money can buy.

The goods are not colored artificially, they get their rich yellow from the entire egg. They not only conform to the Pure Food Laws, but are so much better than the law requires, that you can bank on making and keeping trade with them.

The following form of supplemental certificate is suggested in those cases where a manufacturer desires to apply for permission to place on the market a new batch of a coal-tar dye, which dye has already had a foundation certificate and a manufacturer's certificate filed for it.

SUPPLEMENTAL CERTIFICATE.

I, ..., the undersigned, residing at ..... (street address), in the city of..... county of ..... State of .... hereby certify under oath that I have personally examined and tested for ..... (full name of concern), of ..... (city), county of ..... State of ..... the material known as ..... which corresponds to the coloring matter numbered ..... in A. G. Green's Edition (1904) of the Schultz-Julius "Systematic Survey of the Organic Coloring Matters," and of which a one (1) pound sample marked ..... is herewith submitted, and I have found it to consist of that coloring matter only and to be free from harmful constituents and not to contain any contamination due to imperfect or incomplete manufacture.

This examination was conducted in strict accordance with the detailed scheme of examination fully set forth in the foundation certificate filed ..... (date.)

.....
(Signature of chemist.)

CERTIFICATION.

This supplemental certificate should likewise be accompanied by the same type of manufacturer's certificate as is described above.

When the certificates filed with the Department of Agriculture are found to be satisfactory, a "lot number" will be assigned to each batch, which lot number shall apply to that batch alone and to no other batch of the same color.

According to F. I. D. 76, the seven permitted coal-tar dyes therein named, made specifically for use in foods, may be used in foods provided they bear a guaranty from the manufacturer that they are free from subsidiary products and represent the actual substance the name of which they bear. The guaranty herein considered shall be applied as follows:

Each package sold by the manufacturer should bear the legend "Part of Certified Lot Number ...." The foundation certificate, as well as the corresponding supplemental certificate, does not apply to any certified dye beyond the package originally prepared by the one establishing this certificate. If such a package be broken and the dye therein contained be repacked, the repacked dye, except as hereinafter provided, becomes an uncertified dye, and as such is inhibited.

There is no objection on the part of the Department of Agriculture to mixtures made from these permitted and certified dyes, by those who have filed certificates with the Department, but one (1) pound samples of such mixtures, and the trade name under which each mixture is sold, must be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, and no such trade name or keyed modification thereof may be used for any other mixture.

The exact formula—that is, the true names as well as the numbers assigned to the original package and the proportions of the ingredients used—should be deposited with the Secretary of Agriculture, but such formula need not appear on the label; in lieu of which may appear the legend "Made from Certified Lots number .... and Number ...." etc. If the packages of these mixtures bearing this legend be broken and repacked, the mixture becomes, except as hereinafter provided, an uncertified one, and hence its use is inhibited; that is, the guaranty of the manufacturer shall extend only to the packages prepared by himself and only for so long as they remain in the unbroken form. Whenever new lots of previously established mixtures are made, making use of new certified straight dyes therein, thus necessitating a change in the label, 1-pound samples of the new mixtures should be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The term "competent experts" as used in F. I. D. 76 applies to those who, by reason of their training and experience, are able to examine coal-tar coloring matter to ascertain its identity and to determine the absence of foreign matter not properly belonging to the product, which, if present, renders the substance unfit for use in food products.

The term "batch" as used above is such a quantity of the product as has undergone the same treatment at the same time and the same place as a unit and not otherwise—that is, the lot for one purification.

Those to whom certification is given with respect to their dyes and a lot number assigned should control the sale of such batches so that they may account to the Department of Agriculture by inspection of their books or otherwise for the destination and disposal of each batch.

Those using these certified dyes in the preparation of foods and foodstuffs must be in a position to substantiate the fact that the dyes so used were of a properly certified character.

There is no guaranty on the part of the Department of Agriculture that because the tests described in any foundation certificate have once been accepted, the permanency of such acceptance is assured.

In those cases where a package of a straight dye or a mixture of such dyes, bearing proper labels to the effect that they are of a certified lot or lots, is broken and repacked in still smaller lots, or treated with solvents, mixed, etc., the person or company so treating these dyes must stand sponsor for their integrity. This may be accomplished by submitting a statement to the Secretary of Agriculture as follows:

SECONDARY CERTIFICATE.

I, ... residing at ..... (full address), do hereby certify under oath that I have repacked .... lbs. of certified lot (or lots) ..... purchased from ..... of ..... This repacking has been accomplished in the following fashion: .....
(Full description of what has been done with the lot or lots.)

.....
(Name.)

CERTIFICATION.

On presentation of this certified form, properly filled out, to the Secretary of Agriculture, a lot number will be assigned, which number should be used in labeling according to the methods already described. If, for example, a portion of lot number "127" is repacked in smaller packages, the lot number "127 A" will be assigned to this repacked dye, to enable the Department to follow this into consumption if necessary, and still trace it back to the person by whom the dye was originally certified.

A Case With a Moral.

A case which shows how great is the need of more adequate laws for the protection of creditors, and, lacking those, for the taking of every possible precaution against the making of bad debts, has just transpired in Philadelphia during the past week.

The wholesale grocery firm of Neuman & Schwiers, 77 Hudson street, New York, sold a small order of goods to a dealer named M. Paper, who has a retail grocery store at 1126 Columbia avenue, Philadelphia. A part of the account was paid, but there still remained a small balance which Neuman & Schwiers were unable to collect. Paper promised and repromised, but failed to keep his word, and in the end the New York concern entered suit against him. Paper was present at the hearing, but made no defense, and judgment was granted against him. Asked as to his intent to pay, he was flippant and indifferent by turns and when threatened with levy defied his creditor to make him pay for anything.

Nevertheless, execution was issued and the constable levied upon Paper's goods. The next day Paper filed a claim of legal exemption and his wife filed a claim of ownership in the goods. Since the defendant's stock was small, either one of the two claims would have been sufficient to prevent his creditor from realizing upon the goods levied on. The plaintiff is accordingly compelled to drop his suit, since he has exhausted all resources under the present system of collection laws.

This case is typical of a large number where the debtor, once in possession of goods, is just as impregnably secure against being compelled to pay for them as if he were in the fortress of Gibraltar. This condition is causing a loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, and has only two alternative remedies: First, either a modification of the collection laws in favor of the creditor (the average collection law is wholly in favor of the debtor) or the taking of additional precautions at the time a sale is made. How this can be done is a matter for much discussion. It may be said that 95 per cent. of all bad debts come from the cheapness of credit. In the keen desire to sell, a dealer argues, "Oh, he'll pay me," and sells a man whom he cannot force to pay him by any means open to the law. This puts the creditor at the absolute mercy of the debtor's honesty, which is often nil. If all dealers would follow the plan of refusing credit to men not reachable by the collection laws, except upon legal security, or except where the buyer is personally known to be honest, the number of bad debts would be amazingly reduced.

Question: R. S. M., Pittsburg, Kansas.—A and B own the capital stock of a corporation. A sells his stock to B for $30,000. A covenants with B that he will not engage in the same line of business in the territory now covered by said corporation for a period of five years from the date of the contract. A further covenants with B that he will not employ anyone in the service of the corporation at the time the contract was entered into for a period of five years from the date of the contract. Is the last clause of the contract enforceable, and in case of its breach by A what action can be brought by B?

Answer.—In my judgment the last clause of the agreement is clearly enforceable, provided it had consideration, as to which the query does not clearly state. The remedy would probably be a bill in equity directed to A, praying for an injunction against him forbidding him from employing the corporation people. No bill in equity would lie, however, if there was an adequate remedy at law. Whether there is an adequate remedy at law could only be told upon a more comprehensive examination of the case.

The Soap Powder the People Want.

The three leaders are so well known and liked that it requires no effort on your part to sell them. The same result will follow if you will have them try Pearl Borax Soap Powder. It is made with the same care and attention as are the rest of Young & Co.'s soaps, and where once used will always repeat. Don't forget that it contains one full pound as against 6 to 12 ounces of most other powders on the market. The cartons redeemed by valuable gifts. Made by Chas. W. Young & Co., makers of soaps of merit, Philadelphia.

TESTIMONIALS

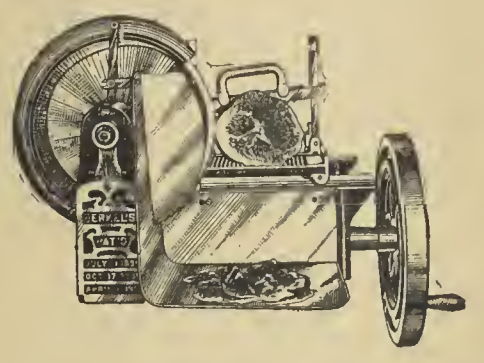
There are two kinds of testimonials—the kind you get and the sometimes stronger kind you don't get.

For instance.

A few months ago we sold a man in a certain town an American Slicing Machine—the only one in the town, as it happened.

Last week the writer saw him again and asked him how he liked the machine.

"Well," said he, "I don't mind telling you that the machine has brought me all the trade of the neighborhood on sliced meats. People even come considerable distances to buy the nice, evenly sliced ham and bacon and dried beef at my store. But let me tell you also, that you'd better not refer any other merchant within two miles of my place to me. Your machine has given me a mortgage on this trade, and no one else is going to share it if I can help it."



Of course, that merchant wasn't giving us a square deal. Yet his attitude constituted the strongest possible testimonial to the merit of the machine.

It has brought him all the trade in his locality in this line.
It will bring you all the trade of your locality.
It costs you nothing to let us prove it.
Your name and address, please.

"Blowing Up Cold to Salesmen."

Phila., Pa., Sept. 26, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I want to compliment the "Stroller" on the article which he wrote for the issue of the "Grocery World" of September 23d.

If a writer ever "hit the nail square on the head," Mr. "Stroller" did it in "Blowing Up Cold to Salesmen," and it is a pity there could not be a law passed that would compel every merchandise buyer in the United States to read it. Of course, to some it does not apply, but no one need take it personally unless it fits.

Let me suggest that you start a fund among the different brokers and salesmen of Philadelphia devoted to publishing and mailing it to the buyers of this State. I shall for one be glad to assist.

Yours truly,
W. G. Root.

As to the New Chain-Store Scheme.

Troy, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Please send to me full particulars about this new company that is going to start all of these new grocery stores. I would like to know something about them, as I am a little interested in what I have read in the "Grocery World." If you think it a good investment please let me know.

Wishing the "Grocery World" abundant success and continued prosperity in your business, and awaiting your future information, I am,

Yours truly,
Martin F. Curley.

The "Grocery World" knows no more of the scheme referred to than it published in the last issue. Why not write to the Universal Co. direct?

Importing Peanuts From the Orient.

New York, Sept. 23, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly inform me whether peanuts are imported into this country at the present time from China and Japan, or could be imported from there advantageously, and would you also furnish me with a list of the largest houses dealing in this line in the United States?

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy, I am,

Yours truly,
Max. Israel.

To the best of the "Grocery World's" knowledge, no peanuts are imported from China and Japan, and we do not believe could be advantageously.

Two large peanut concerns are John Nix & Co., Inc., New York City; Arguimbau & Ramee, New York City.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 4, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is very active at present, grinders buying largely for their needs during the fall.

There will be, no doubt, a scarcity of some spices, which should have the tendency to advance prices.

Pepper.—Holland is low at present on Lampong. London is quoting higher prices on all futures. Peppers are, no doubt, safe at present prices.

Cayennes.—Prime bright Chillies continue scarce and firm.

Cloves.—There is a great diversity of opinion as regards the exact amount of new crop. Some dealers predict a very high market; others, lower prices. It is hard to predict the future of this article.

Pimento (Allspice) remains very firm and we anticipate a much higher market to prevail.

Nutmegs are in very good demand and prices practically unchanged.

Mace is in large demand at present, and good fine quality is very scarce and hard to obtain.

Gingers.—We can report a more active market, with practically no changes in prices.

Seeds.—Celery is firm and slightly higher. Caraway steady, but practically unchanged. Coriander is selling well; market should advance when the heavy demand sets in.

Yours truly,
McCormick & Co.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 4, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—As anticipated in our previous market letters, the market for tomatoes has been very strong, and the week closed with a decidedly upward tendency. The buying was the largest by long odds than during any previous week in the season, and the outlook is that the coming week will be equally as active. Continued buying on such a large scale means higher prices, of course, and the buyer who acts quickly and covers his wants for the fall and winter trade will, we think, not regret his purchase. Before this week the largest buying was on the part of the Western tomato canners and jobbers to cover their short sales, but the jobbers throughout all the other sections commenced to buy very freely, which made the aggregate of the purchases very large. The tomato market is worth the immediate attention of intending buyers. Fully two-thirds of the jobbers have been awaiting for lower prices and the percentage of the buyers who have yet to cover their wants makes it unsafe for those who have not bought any tomatoes to wait longer.

In addition to the activity in the tomato market, there was an excellent demand for a larger number of articles in the line of fruits and vegetables, the prices of some articles which were again marked up, the leaders in activity being corn, apples, string beans, sweet potatoes, peas, etc. It is noticeable that a very great majority of the buying is a repetition of previous orders for the same goods within a short period of time, indicating that the stock generally in the hands of the jobbers must be very light comparatively. The outlook is for a strong and active market in canned goods this fall.

Yours truly,
Thos. J. Meehan & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 4, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The demand for tomatoes has been the heaviest, we think, this season. Orders are coming from all sections, and the market closes in strong, healthy shape. Packing is still going on down here, though packers are hav-ng more or less difficulty with abor, etc. The demand for goods s really surprising, and it is beginning to look as though no matter how many tomatoes are packed this ear they can easily be disposed of. Many packers are still behind on heir orders, and those who are caught up do not seem to have any rouble at all in selling their surplus as they get it. We have rarely had such a snappy market. One of the features of the situation has been a large demand from Western points, which is no doubt due to the lateness of the season in the West.

We are having a heavy demand for string beans of all kinds and offerings are light. Packers do not seem to be able to get up enough surplus to enable them to offer string beans freely; as a consequence, it is difficult to fill orders.

Apples.—The market continues strong. No. 3s have advanced further. We are paying to-day $1 per dozen for No. 3s and $3.30 to $3.35 per dozen for No. 10s.

The situation on corn is in strong, healthy shape. Offerings of Maine style corn have dwindled down very decidedly. Corn packing is still going on, but owing to the sales of futures packers are still mostly out of the market.

While berries are not attracting the attention that some other lines are, yet they seem to be working to a better position right along.

Second peas are stronger. The cheap lots have about been cleaned up.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & Co.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Hyson Tea.

Hyson, or Hichun (literally meaning "blooming spring" or "fair spring") is a name for certain kinds of green teas of the first crop, and were until lately highly esteemed in this country; but owing to the artificial and injurious coloring matter with which the Chinese adulterated them, all green teas have gone much out of favor. They are packed in half-chests and boxes, averaging 58 pounds and 17 pounds each.

Young Hyson—from Chinese Yu Tsien ("before the rains") or Tu Chun ("flourishing spring")—means Hyson tea picked early, before the rains, and is considered superior to ordinary Hyson. Half-chests hold about 65 pounds, and boxes 25 pounds.

Iceland Moss.

A lichen which grows two to four feet high on several Icelandic mountain tracks which are otherwise desert. It is largely used in that country for feeding cattle, pigs, etc., and has long been used in civilized countries either alone or in conjunction with other ingredients as human food. It is much darker in color than Irish moss and presents a more drooping and shrivelled appearance, but it quite soluble in hot water and forms a jelly when cold.

Its natural bitterness is removed by soaking for about 15 minutes each time in several hot waters and finally boiling.

It contains about 80 per cent. of lichen starch, but not a particle of gelatine. It is often boiled with milk and made into a very agreeable jelly-like food for invalids, etc. If made with water only, half its weight of liquorice root added to the dry moss makes a great improvement.

Hunyadi Janos.

A very popular natural mineral water, having a sale of several million bottles per annum. It possesses valuable aperient properties, and on analysis appears to be composed of calcic sulphate, 0.41; magnesic do., 16.05; sodic do., 25.00; magnesic chloride, 1.20; silica, 0.12; water, 957.22—1,000.00.

These Plans Have Brought Business

A Handful of Good Breezy Schemes Calculated to Stir the Dry Bones in Your Store. All Have Been in Actual Use With Success.

[The following special plans for booming business at special times or during periods of natural dullness, have been collected from actual experience by Butler Brothers, of Chicago, and are reproduced here for use by any reader who may care to adapt them. The strong feature about them is that they have all been actually used.]

A South Carolina store is getting some excellent advertising from a set of attractive souvenir postal cards, giving views of the town, its cotton mills, the store and other local points of interest.

* * *

No store nowadays has a broken window that cannot in some way be turned into an advertisement. A man fell through the window of a store in a New England city recently and almost immediately the merchant had up the following sign: "Two breaks—our window and our prices. Both completely shattered. Be wise. Come in and take advantage of the latter break. You can save money." Across the inside of the window, at the top of the break, there was a board upon which was inscribed an admonition to look at the other side.

* * *

A Nebraska merchant has solved a problem that has caused country merchants no end of worry—the loss of trade from rural patrons who drive up to the store and go elsewhere from lack of attention from the clerks within. His invention is an electric alarm. Two posts have been erected, one in front of the store at the curb line and another in the alley at the rear of the building. To these posts an electric wire is fastened with a push button, so that all a farmer has to do is to drive up, push the button and the ring of a bell in the store indicates from which direction the call is made and a clerk responds to it.

* * *

This plan has proved a big advertisement whenever used. Everyone tries to get to the window and then goes away to tell his or her friends. The plan is simplicity itself. Place in your window as many turtles as there are letters in your firm's name. Paint on the back of each turtle one of these letters. Offer a generous prize to the person who first sees the turtles in a line so as to spell the name complete and correctly. With the tendency of the turtles to wobble it is not difficult to keep up the excitement.

Show Card Talk.

It is unnecessary in this enlightened day and age of mercantile progressiveness to offer any argument for the use of show cards, they are a recognized necessity in the modern store. But the question that confronts the merchant is how and where to get up-to-date cards at reasonable prices and in the quickest time possible. An attractive offer is made on another page of this issue by a St. Louis firm which is making a special effort to reach the grocery trade. Merchants who are using or expect to use show cards will do well to look up this proposition and give the manufacturers a trial order.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

'Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—Ed.]

DON'T TALK HIGH PRICES.

The almost daily changes that we make in prices tending upward gives you some idea of how the market is going. Every single advance we have so far made is warranted to the letter.

But don't talk high prices. Don't make the situation any worse than it is. And, above all, don't make any apologies for the advanced prices. It isn't our doing. The thing is simply unavoidable.

NEW PEAS.

We'll talk new peas in a few days, so get ready—that is, anticipate an opening sale. You've seen the Queen Quality cut and you've seen also the Jeromes, one is 15 cents, the other 12 cents the can. Go easy on the 10-cent article this year. That is, be a little careful to whom you sell them. Away along in the season you're likely to hear complaints about "bursts" and about "your peas not being the same color in the cans." We'll go into this verbally with you.

OLIVE OIL.

The olive oil "cure" is now being talked about. The medicinal properties of pure oil is unquestioned. The purity and genuineness of ——— & ——— are known everywhere. Keep the price at 40 cents and 75 cents.

VACATION IS OVER

with us all for another year. It's work now, and that word "work" means thinking and acting. Think as you go. Think things out. Aspire, but not like a dreamer. Aspiration isn't worth the time you spend on it unless keep "digging" at the same time.

C. O. D'S.

Always take it for granted that the customer intends to pay when she gives the order at the store. Never ask her whether she wants it sent C. O. D.

It means a great saving of time for the delivery men, especially on Saturday, yet you must be careful not to make your customer feel annoyed by insisting in the remotest way on this. Just suggest like this: "Is it not quicker and easier and is not the change more likely to be correct when the transaction is made with the cashier?"

"THE BOTTOM AS GOOD AS THE TOP"

Our Apelpi Evaporated Apples are a prime grade of New York fruit, selected from the best flavored and matured apples.

The square cartons are lined with waxed paper and their contents are guaranteed to be as fine as anything in the market.

Every piece of fruit is hand picked and must be perfect before it goes into our machines.

The result is a product for which the demand is not only enormous, but constantly growing.

They Wouldn't Imitate It If It Wasn't So Good

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

They'll Want to Pay

It is true that under many collection laws a debtor who doesn't want to pay can't be made to pay, even though he is able to pay.

We can't bring any more pressure on your debtors than any other collector, but we have learned how to apply that pressure differently, not to force the debtor harder to pay, but to make him want to pay.

We have taken thousands of debtors who were just as indifferent as they could be, and after we got through with them they wanted to pay so badly that they couldn't send in their checks quick enough.

You have some old money on your books we can get.

Ham Confidence

There is a vast difference between merely "ham" and Swift's PREMIUM Ham.

The grocer who just keeps "ham," who buys no special brand, and buys from no particular packer, is just as certain to have a small and irregular ham trade as night is certain to follow day.

But the grocer who sells only Swift's PREMIUM ham, which is always the same and always fine, will have a ham trade that amounts to something. His trade won't care to experiment with other grocers; they're getting what they want and they're getting it all the time.

PREMIUM Hams are tender, delicious and—this is important—well advertised.

We Can Show You How to Increase Your Business

If you walked down Market or Chestnut Streets at night and one window in a block was brilliantly illuminated, while the rest were in darkness, which would you stop to look at? The lighted one most certainly. If that window displayed goods you needed at a low price, that store would impress itself upon you and most likely you would go back and buy when it was open—because an impression would be made on you.

Did it ever strike you that if you lighted your store window up at night after you closed and exhibited something in it that would attract attention, that passers-by would remember your place and come in when you opened up, to get what you offered, particularly if nearby competitors left their windows in darkness?

If it seems like an unnecessary expense to light your windows when your store is closed, write or phone us and we will show you that you can make up what it will cost you for a month, in one day's new business.

The Butter's Better Than Its Picture

This is a poor picture of a carton of Gurnse Butter. The butter itself is wrapped in brine-dipped paper, which keeps the flavor and the freshness absolutely unimpaired.

Gurnse Butter

is getting famous. Our trade on it shows enormous increases, partly because we're spending considerable money in advertising it, but mostly because those who eat it have found that it never varies from a superfine delicious quality of the fanciest grade.

Produced by our own creameries and inspected by the Philadelphia Produce Exchange inspector. It must grade extra. As a leader it is par excellence.

P. F. BROWN & CO., 39 S. Front St., Phila.

Rae's Lucca Olive Oil

An Olive Oil of the purest quality—pressed only from perfect olives and carefully preserved from contact with anything that would hurt its exquisite flavor; beautiful to the eye and agreeable to the taste.

Do you keep it in stock?

How We Could Make Thousands of Dollars

If we had been willing to degrade the quality or the purity of Ralston Health Food or Purina Whole Wheat Flour one degree, we could have made thousands of dollars more in the last few years than we have made.

But—leaving conscience out of it—would our business have grown as it has? Would we have at our back to-day such an army of healthy people who swear by these two perfect products.

No, had we done that we would not have been certain of anything—except that while we were building at the top we were undermining at the base.

Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour embody 100 per cent. purity. They are ideal foods. If you will stock them in and let the fact be known you will probably get an order the very first day through the advertising we are doing in the magazines.

Samples supplied for your trade upon written request to the Mills.

Are You One of the Silly Ones?

In any year when a future canned goods contract is of any use at all, it is important that you should get all you bought. That is the only reason why you bought ahead—to protect yourself against a shortage.

Isn't it silly then to allow your future protective contract to be wholly neutralized by letting your jobber deliver what he pleases? If you are not to get what you bought, why buy ahead at all?

You can get all you bought by buying Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods. We give your jobber 100 per cent. contracts on them, and he can give it to you.

Read the Point In Large Type

Here's the proposition of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet in a nutshell:—

1. It is the cleanest rennet made.
2. It coagulates milk in 2 to 5 minutes.
3. It will not spoil.
4. Every bottle is guaranteed.
5. Jobbers everywhere indorse it.

And last, but not least—this is in large type because it's a large point—it pays 100 per cent. profit. Costs $1.50, sells for $3.00.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

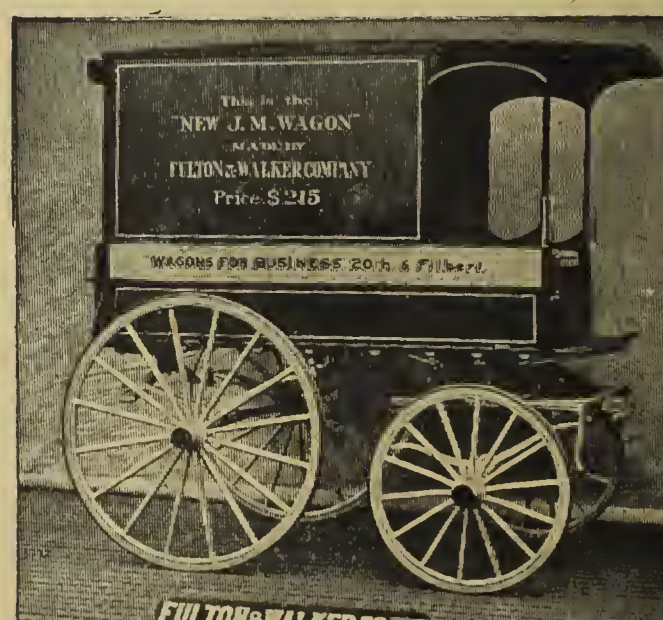
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon



If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.
